William and Jacob Evans, two small children, were at the home of Philip Yarling, near Shelbyville, and they were playing around a wind pump when they caught their hands in the machine. The boy had one finger taken off at the first joint and the girl, in trying to assist the boy, had one of her fingers taken off at the joint.

Carlius F. Kepper, foreman of the jointing shop of the Bauer Cooperage Works in Lawrenceburg, was struck in the right eye by a piece of steel from a circular saw that burst. The sight of the eye was destroyed and it is thought that he will lose the sight of the other eye. Kepper served as corporal in Company M, 161st Indiana Volunteers during the Spanish-American War.

John H. Luchtman, an aged farmer and veteran of the Civil War, was bitten by a rattlesnake on his farm, five miles south of Michigan City. He was mowing in a meadow and stopped to remove some grass that had choked the sickle, when he touched the reptile and it sank its fangs into his hand. His wrist was bound with twine and he was hurriedly taken to a hospital. He will recover. The snake was killed. It had five rattles.

Albert Shoaf, rural carrier on route No. 3 at Petersburg, has purchased an automobile and hereafter will use it in delivering the mail. Mr. Shoaf has had much trouble in keeping his horses in condition to travel twenty-five miles a day. By using an auto he can work three-fourths of the day for himself and at the same time draw his salary from the Government. If the experiment is successful, several other automobiles will be bought at once.

Lightning struck the same house twice within fifteen minutes during an electrical storm at Hagerstown. The first bolt tore the roof and weather-boarding from the northwest gable of the house owned by Arch Benbow. Less than fifteen minutes later a second crash came and Mr. Benbow was severely shocked. This bolt had entered the back kitchen, melted a nail where it entered, and run along a heavy oak stringer which was reduced to splinters as fine as matches. The fluid encountered a second nail and turned from its course and its trace was lost.

Detectives, following a trail of white flour from the Steck & Miller grain establishment in Muncie, arrived at the grocery of Elias Bromagen and there asked him whether he had not received a large quantity of stolen flour. Bromagen admitted that he had purchased of strangers in the middle of the night considerable flour about which he had asked no question, and he surrendered this. He also produced certain empty sacks that had contained flour stolen from the confectionery store of Charles Hinkley and said that he had obtained that from the same men. No arrests have been made.

When J. A. Landers, county treasurer at Martinsville, opened his mail a few days ago he found a money order for $2.14, accompanied by a letter from a former Morgan County citizen, in which the latter said he wished to correct a wrong committed in 1907, when he failed to list $100 worth of his personal property. He knew the tax rate for that year for his township and enclosed the proper amount. The writer did not mention the township, but Treasurer Landis made an examination and found which township had that rate and then found the man's name on the tax duplicate. The amount was put on the duplicate and a receipt was sent him for his taxes for that year. The man now lives in another part of this State.

Hershel Cooper, the 16-year-old son of Leamon Cooper, was drowned in D. W. Hayes' pond about one-half mile north of Odon. Cooper and a few other boys were swimming when Cooper was seized with cramps and sank.

The first cement sidewalk in Goshen, laid thirty-four years ago in front of the residence of Mrs. J. M. Noble, has just been torn up to be replaced by a new one. Only the havoc wrought by roots of trees growing near made it necessary to tear up the old walk.

Joseph Robbins, aged 56 years, came from Spiceland and took poison in Maxwell Briscoe Park, New Castle. Boys flying kites came across the still breathing man and called assistance, but he died.

Through the kindness of their neighbors, Wallace Boszor and family, whose home south of Kendallville was recently destroyed by fire, now have a new modern home nearly completed and in a few days will move in. All the material and labor were furnished by the neighbors free of cost to the family, whose members are poor.

A Hazard of Hearts

"I don't know that there is any excitement, only—there was something I felt that I must say to you at once. Captain Kerr came to me a little while ago, and was asking me most kindly about my plans, and if he could help me in any way. He asked me to come and stay with his wife, and to give him my Paris address."

"I hope you reminded him of the man in Chicago who made a large fortune by minding his own business."

Mathilde was too intent on her own line of thought to smile.

"I did nothing of the sort. I thanked him sincerely for what I am sure was pure kindness."

"And you gave him the address?" Stewart's voice had in it an echo of carefully restrained wrath.

"No, I gave him the address of a pension where I have stayed, but where they know nothing of my movements now."

Stewart laughed. "A much more feminine method of saying the same thing."

"Well, will you have the kindness, then, to tell me what else you expected me to do?" she retorted, with warmth.

"Our little altercation really sounds quite matrimonial," he commended; then—"I think you acted with the tact and discretion which I should have expected," he went on soothingly. "But now, what comes next?" for he was quick to see that she had not yet approached the main issue.

"Next is a new aspect of affairs which has just dawned upon me, and which, if you cannot prove my view to be incorrect, will cause me to give up the whole thing at once. I was a fool not to see it before." She was speaking in a low, intense tone, and unconsciously quickened her steps as she went on. "Do you remember my saying the other day that Captain Kerr had told me that you were a married man. Well, if he is under that impression, other people out there must be so as well. That was what the missionary told your home people. It is hardly to be supposed that we can always successfully avoid everyone who has ever been there. Well then, when they meet me, what do they think me?"

Mr. Stewart remained unmoved under this flow of words.

"I am sorry that I failed the other day in making you understand matters more clearly," he said, gravely. "Your first premises are altogether wrong. Nobody in my own neighborhood dreams that I was ever married. They all knew her"—since hearing Mathilde Thorne's name he had never spoken of the "habitant" woman by that name—"to be the wife of Antoine, the lumberman. By some strange chance the missionary picked up a different story, but he could not have gone away with that impression if he had been anything save a wanderer, here to-day and gone to-morrow. He certainly never was at my house, or saw either of us."

"That does not account for Captain Kerr——" she interrupted; but, with a checking movement of his hand, he went on:

"I think that if you search your memory, you will probably find that this was what happened: Kerr, who, however, was never but once in my part of the country, most probably knew the whole story, but in talking with you most probably let out something about my home life which he could explain in no other hypothesis than that of my being a married man. There are few men who would give another away by letting out the truth, so he did what nine men in ten would have done, cast the veil of respectability over my domestic arrangements. Don't you think that it came about in something of that fashion?"

Mathilde pondered a moment, as they tramped steadily along, the mist driving in their faces.

"Yes, I rather fancy that it did happen in some such fashion," she agreed thoughtfully. "I remember that he was talking of the isolation of households, and instanced the graves that are seen near some of the homesteads as an embodiment of all the solitude of the land. When I rode up to Stewart's door at Prairie Dell, the white cross over his child's grave on the hill gave me a chill at the heart, for fear such a cross should mark my door," he said; and then I asked him if you were married."

"And he answered rather dryly that I was?"

"Exactly so."

"There, you see, I guessed rightly."

"Perhaps so, but I should feel much happier if I were certain about it."

Stewart meditated a bit before he said: "Very well, then, I will settle it with him before we leave the ship."

"Not in connection with me,' she said, with quick alarm.

"Your name shall not be mentioned in the matter," he promised, then went on more gravely: "I really think it would be better for both if you could bring yourself to see that it is as much against my interest as yours, for any slur to come upon your name in the matter."

"How am-I to tell," she broke out wildly, "what are your real interests or plans in the affair."

They had instinctively paused, and stood facing each other.

"If that is how you really feel," he said, "it would indeed be better to give up the whole idea." Then, with a sudden change to his gentler manner, he added: "Don't be so hard on me; I'm sure that after all you trust me a little more than you say. Come, shake hands on it, won't you?" And, rather to her own surprise, Mathilde found herself placing her hand, or rather her fur mitt, in his.

The next morning Stewart seized a passing chance to tell her that he had ascertained that Captain Kerr knew him to be an unmarried man, but no leading remark of Mathilde's had power to bring force any details of the interview, save that there had no mention of her name in the matter.

To her sensitive watchfulness it seemed as though, at lunch, Captain Kerr's manner had lost some of its friendliness, but it was the last day of the voyage, and the routine of the friendly, leisurely sea life was over, so that she had no opportunity to make sure of the fact. In the morning there was the excitement of the half-hour's tarrying in Moville harbor to land the mails.

The afternoon was occupied with the business of packing, paying wine bills, and all such small endings to the voyage, for the captain expected to catch the midnight tide at the Liverpool bar, and to land his passengers at daybreak.

The Liverpool docks are never a very cheerful place, and they certainly were not at their best in the late December dawn, in that chill drizzle with which Liverpool generally greets the wanderer.

Stewart had spoken his last confidential word to Mathilde: "It's better for me to wait and come up by the next train. I will come to you to-morrow afternoon at Chelsea. If anything should happen sooner, wire me at the Metropole. Let Charlie Hudson go up to town with you."

Charlie Hudson had asked nothing better, and had fairly beamed with radiancy as the two sat over breakfast together in the dining-room of the Lime Street Hotel.

At the first thought Mathilde was dismayed to find that he had taken first-class tickets, but then, with a sudden laugh, she recollected that it did not matter. She need no longer hoard her little store, for her present supply would hold out until her marriage, and then, after that—was it the deluge?

She parted with Charlie Hudson at Euston—that place of partings—and the boy looked rather ruefully as he held her hand at the cab door.

"I must go down to my people to-night as soon as I have had my hair cut and ordered some clothes, but perhaps I could come up and see you in a few days.' The latter part of the sentence was added tentatively.

"It's no use," she responded cheerfully; "I shall be off to Paris as soon as possible. We had better say good-bye now."

"But you will write?" he asked eagerly.

"Oh, yes, I will write. Good-bye," and she smiled her farewell, while he watched the cab driving off.

"There," she said to herself, "that is over. I wonder what comes next."

"Next" was a welcome amount of physical comfort in a warm bath, and a subsequent sup of tea by a good fire. Who that has not made a winter voyage can understand the joy contained in those words!

The short day had darkened, and the deficiencies of the plain little lodging-house room were hidden in the kindly cheer of the firelight.

The comfort of wearing a soft silk tea-gown instead of the perpetual weight of heavy wraps; the sense of sole possession of even that small room, after ten days of the close gregariousness of ship life; the mere glow and warmth of the firelight—these were enough to give a sensation of well-being that was akin to cheerfulness.

That was the life that she had been contemplating—a solitary fireside after a day's work. With the late regret that we give to what is ended, she saw now the good side of such a life; the absolute freedom, the peaceful work. Her mind, which she had thought quite determined, was, all of a sudden, struggling again in a sea of doubt.

An hour had passed before she rose, with the uncertain step of one just off rolling seas, and sitting down at the table, wrote off quickly a letter to Mrs. Silas P. Stark, Boulevard Clichy, Paris. She said how much she regretted that family circumstances had unexpectedly occurred which would make it more advisable for her to go on with her art studies in London than in Paris, and offered, if she had put her friend to any financial inconvenience, to compensate her for it.

Then, with the indifference of one who had burned her boats, she pulled up her chair to the fire, and began to study with interest the fashions in the bundle of papers which Charlie Hudson had bought for her.

CHAPTER VII.

It is a common enough experience with those whose path leads them down to the sea in ships to find that the intimate unconventional friendship of the deck is placed on an entirely different footing by the mere resumption of shore clothes and habits. The man in the tall hat, the woman in the new bonnet and town dress seem to require a more ceremonious treatment than did the same two people bundled in a miscellaneous assortment of last winter's wraps. Out of the stress of complicated sensations Mathilde had forgotten to include the new mutual attitude as a very probable factor in her first meeting with Stewart. It was there though, as she at once realized the next afternoon when her door opened to admit him. True, his turnout might not have passed muster in Piccadilly, for the smartest of tailors cannot perform instantaneous results; but the trimmed hair, stiff white collar replacing the flannel one, new hat, gloves and overcoat were enough to produce a very different effect, and it was with a pang of dismay that Mathilde realized what a complete stranger he was to her. Mingled with the dismay at their mutual standing was an impersonal impression of admiration.

Mathilde had seen enough of the world to know that nowhere, under any circumstances, could this man be mistaken for other than he was—one used from his birth to rule and to lead, secure in his own self-reliance, embittered, perhaps, by his experience of life, but showing it only in the stoical indifference with which he met everything that fate sent him. A strong man individually, strengthened by the habits and instincts of his class, would his strength be to her a tower of refuge, or a heavy hand to crush? Stewart seemed to read the scrutiny and doubt in her eyes.

"Well," he said, smiling as he held her hand, "and what do you think of me in my shore rig-out?" Then, seeing her embarrassment, "Never mind, you needn't tell me. Let me say, instead, how much I am impressed by yours."

Mathilde was still in the street dress which she had worn during the day, a plain, tailor-made black cloth. With one of the subtle little feminine fancies as to some small point of attire in one of life's crises, she had left on her hat, feeling as though the outdoor dress took away somewhat from the intimacy of this first real tete-a-tete.

"You look fairly comfortable here," Stewart went on, with a scrutinizing glance around. "And you are going to give me some tea, and let me sit by the fire a bit, aren't you?" Then, as they were seated, he added: "Heavens, what a comfort it is to feel that one can speak out without looking over one's shoulder to see if Kerr or Hudson are within earshot! And there is such a lot to say!"

There was, indeed, much to say—the minutiae of plans which he had matured since their last confabulation. One of these plans was the obtaining of a maid, which he pronounced necessary, "or else Mrs. Herbert would say in her honeyed voice, 'You must let me find you a nice, reliable woman, my dear,' and there you might be settled with a spy of hers in your pocket."

"But if I got a maid now she would know everything."

"Oh, you must not get her until you are at the Metropole. I will speak to the manager to-day about my wife wanting one when she comes to town. They always know about people. Don't you think that a French woman, with a mere smattering of English, would be best? She would be more dependent upon, and less liable to gossip."

"Yes, I suppose so," she agreed, wondering a bit at his grasp of trifles.

"There is another matter,' he went on more seriously; "I want to tell you that I intend settling the half of my Northwest property upon you. It is all that I have at my disposal at present, although I suppose that, if all goes well, my father will make some arrangement for me. Of course, at the same time, I shall have a will in your favor prepared for me to sign after the marriage."

Mathilde began to realize how much she was going to accept from this man, who was all but a stranger to her.

She leaned forward impulsively.

"It is impossible that I should accept so much from you," she said quickly. "The will may be fair enough, though I hope—I am sure that you ought to—" she stammered and paused, and then went on desperately: "You must consider the claims of——"

"That is all attended to," he interrupted.

"Then I consent to the will, but I do not want, I will not have anything settled on me at present. I have quite sufficient for my own needs," she said rather proudly, "for you must remember," with a sad smile, "that what makes a very slim income makes ample pocket-money. I have nearly two hundred pounds a year," she added simply.

An amused smile lit Stewart's face. "You poor child! And you were going to try to live on that in Paris, having, I suppose, had all your life everything you fancied?"

There was a gentleness, almost tenderness, in his voice which somehow shook her composure, but she choked the passing weakness down, and answered in a matter-of-fact fashion:

"I could have done it. I have known several who did it on less."

"And grown old before your time, and dowdy and dreary. Well, no matter, now that the danger is past. You say that you cannot agree to this settlement, forgetting that it is a mere matter of business. If we carry, as we shall do, this affair to a successful conclusion, you will have secured a large fortune to me. This is a very small first-fruit on my part. You must look at it in that light."

"Then I should not have it before I earned it," she retorted more brightly.

"You are too logical. All I can say it, that I consider the arrangement only fair and right, and shall be much wounded if you refuse me my way in the matter. Now, will you consent?"

The keen eyes emphasized the demand, and almost to her own surprise, she found herself answering "Yes" in a passive fashion.

THE COMMON LADY-BIRD.

Few Are Aware of Her Services to Florists and Gardeners.

Everybody knows the common lady bird, but not every one is aware of the immense services rendered by this insect to florists and gardeners. Most insects are harmful to vegetation, their larvae generally eating the leaves of whatever plant the eggs may be laid on, and it has been calculated that the larvae or caterpillars of some varieties of beetles eat a hundred thousand times their own weight of vegetable food before they attain their full size and begin to spin their cocoons.

The lady-bird, however, is an exception, for both the larvae and the beetle are carnivorous and feed on other insects, generally the aphis, which is so harmful to chrysanthemums and almost all other kinds of vegetation.

The lady-bug lays her eggs on the under side of the chrysanthemum leaf, and as soon as the larvae are hatched they begin to prowl about the leaves and stems of the plant, looking for aphis or any other insect smaller than themselves. The larvae simply hunt for food, but the full-grown lady-bug is a veritable tiger among the plant pests, and will tear and slay even after she has eaten all she can possibly swallow. One lady-bird will destroy all the aphis on a large chrysanthemum in two or three days. Not one will escape. The aphis seem to recognize her as their natural enemy, and, although they have never seen a lady-bug before, as soon as one lights on a branch they turn tail and run, with every appearance of the most abject terror. Sometimes, when closely pursued, they let go all hold and drop off the branch in the hope of getting away. But they never do, for, once on their trail, the lady-bug hunts them down and tears them to pieces, apparently out of sheer malignant sport.

There seems no doubt that the benefits conferred by this tigerish insect were recognized ages ago. The name lady-bug, or lady-bird, is a contraction of "our lady's bird," for in the traditional lore of Italy, France and Germany the insect is sacred to the Virgin Mary, and centuries ago German children were taught that to harm or kill one of these insects was a sin. The idea is still prevalent among children, for in nine cases out of ten when a lady-bird is caught it is at once released after a recitation of the rhyme beginning, "Lady-bird, lady-bird fly away home." In India, where the insects sometimes appear in considerable numbers, as they occasionally do also in Europe, they are so highly esteemed that in the folklore of the country when a lady-bird lights on any one he is immediately endowed with saintly virtues.

"Scot-Free."

The word "scot-free" is a survival from ancient Anglo Saxon. Scot in this sense comes from the old English word sceot, meaning a portion of tribute or taxation, and it is still in use in the Scandinavian languages to signify treasure. In modern English however, it occurs in only two expressions, the legal phrase, "to pay scot and lot," and the ordinary word "scot free."

There are different grades of oil-stones, hard and soft. The best oil to use on an oil-stone is paraffin; water is better on a hard stone.

To a depraved taste, sweet is bitter.—Spanish.

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

Picnics Good Way to Entertain.

A picnic is one of the most attractive forms of entertainment, especially where a hostess wishes to give a simple affair. As the success of a picnic depends on the attractiveness of the luncheon, care must be given to its choosing and packing. If it takes place in a woods, fresh fish, coffee, and potatoes cooked over a bonfire, besides being attractive edibles, contribute great fun. If the picnic takes place in a park, sandwiches, cold meats, salads, pickles, cakes, ice cream and lemonade should be chosen. Small rolls filled with lettuce, chopped olives, nuts, minced meats, keep fresh and are easily handled. Pickles, olives and chow chow are good appetizers and when put in bottles keep fresh. A large cake or small cakes baked the day before make attractive dessert. Though coffee is not readily heated, iced coffee and lemonade are cooling drinks.

It is well for the hostess to plan games while she and her helpers are setting the table. The table should be spread on the grass in true picnic style. An inexpensive tablecloth may be used, with a square of white oil cloth the same size to put underneath. In the center are placed the dishes, filled with sandwiches, olives, pickles, nuts, fruit and cake. Each place is set with a wooden plate, Japanese napkin, a knife, fork and spoons.

The picnic over, the hostess should be as particular about clearing the table as she would be in her own home. The crumbs can be fed to the birds. The wooden plates and napkins put back into the luncheon basket and destroyed at home.

A Cheerful Home.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day; one surly glance casts a shadow over the household. But a smile may light up the darkest and dreariest hours. No matter how humble the abode, if it is thus garnished with grace and kindness, the heart will turn lovingly toward it from the tumult of the world without. The gentle grace of the mother of such a home remains to be seen in her daughter and the fatherly kindness finds its echo in the nobility and courtesy of the sons. On the other hand, from an unhappy, misgoverned home, go forth those who will make other homes unhappy and perpetuate the sadness, contentions and strife of their own early lives.—Agricultural Epitomist.

The Midsummer Girl.

She tired of the drooping hat that presses so heavily on her perspiring forehead these torrid midsummer days, yet in her efforts to render herself more comfortable this wise girl does not lose sight of Dame Fashion. She knows that black hats never were so popular, so she takes a look around and finally buys a graceful wide brimmed shape in black lace braid. She drapes it in voluminous folds of soft black satin around the crown—a simple but effective and becoming trimming. She buys a couple of stunning hat pins of brilliants, and instead of wearing the hat down over the eyes as fashion has decreed in the recent past, she daringly pints it back—off her face. Thus she bows to fashion in wearing the black hat, but openly defies her in the method of wearing it.

Health and Beauty Hints.

For unbroken chilblains rubbing with common table salt is one of the best remedies known. Add just enough water to make the salt damp.

The finger nails should be manicured once each week, then if they are scrubbed and polished every day it should keep them in good order.

A fine-tooth comb, valuable for certain purposes, is capable of injuring the scalp if used unwisely, for the tiny points, close together, irritate the skin and, far from removing the dandruff, as many persons think, will increase it.

For the circulation of the blood in the scalp a vigorous brushing in the sun will prove wonderfully helpful. It brings new shimmer and color, and all the unnatural oils are banished by the warm rays, so that the coiffure will be soft and fluffy.

Scour the Irons.

One point in which the novice in ironing often fails lies in not having the irons perfectly clean before beginning work. To do really good work begin by scouring the irons thoroughly with soap and water. They must not be dried on the fire, as this creates an immediate rust, which works off on the clothes.

Definition of a Lady.

A prize offered by the Gentlewoman (London) for the best definition of a lady was won by the following effort: "To be a lady means, rightly, to be a gentlewoman who shows by her every word and action a sweet and gentle dignity, with a gracious charm of manner. A woman whose heart is pure and true, who is tender toward all suffering, who sympathizes with those in trouble, and is ever ready to give that which costs her some effort and self-denial. A lady thinks no work derogatory, and no one is deemed too low to receive courtesy and kindness. She is pure and good in every detail of life, a true friend and a 'ministering angel' in sorrow and in sickness."

Comfort for Plain Women.

Plain women exist, and form a definite factor in our social economy. Not all of us are blessed with good features, soft eyes, a fine figure and a clear complexion. Some of us are born with dull skins, wide mouths and snub noses, and not all the arts of dress and toilet can make us pretty, or even presentable.

But all the same, plain women live and thrive, and now and then make brilliant marriages, says Mrs. Fitzroy Stewart in the Strand. In fact, one has only to use one's eyes to see that some ugly women have for men quite a weird power of attraction. History teaches us this; for we are told, in several instances, of uncomely women who have ruled the destinies of men and nations.

Catherine of Russia and Mme. de Maintenon had no looks; and Mary, Queen of Scots, who has gone down to fame as a beauty, appears in her pictures as thin, small-eyed, and hard-featured. Indeed, only one portrait is said to exist in which she is shown as fair-haired and lovely, and this hangs in Dalkeith palace, and belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch.

The Family Washing.

To a boiler of water add one cup washing fluid and one bar of good soap. White heating sort the clothes, making four piles—best white in one, second best white in the second, common white in the third, and colored in the fourth. Put the best clothes in the washer, adding one and one-half pails of hot water from the boiler, and then enough cold water to cover. Turn the washer wheel from fifty to a hundred times. Wring out the clothes and put into the boiler. If needed, add more water to boiler. Let clothes boil well. While the first boil wash the second. Take the first from the boiler and put in second, adding one-half cup fluid. Treat all the white in the same way. Then wash the colored without boiling. Put clean cold water in washer. Wash all the clothes through. Then rinse in the washer by giving a few turns to the wheel. Starch without blueing and hang out. Should be done in less than two hours.

The hat reproduced here, while not being a strictly tailored model, would be appropriate for wear with that style of dress. For the development of this roughly woven basket straw in mahogany brown was used. The shape was trimmed by a stiff band of silk, richly embroidered in gold and the different shades from thence to the brown of the straw and bordered by plain silk in the deepest shade. This band was adjusted in waved lines, the two pointed ends meeting—but not joining—on the right near the front. A sweep of handsome aigrettes in tones of brown and gold completed the garniture.

A new fancy is the large soft wing, the pointed tip of which runs into a broad, stiff quill. The quill is of the same color as the wing, but it is usually covered with big dots of a contrasting color.

Strings, usually not serving any practical purpose, but caught up and knotted in some graceful fashion, appear upon a number of most picturesque broad-brimmed hats this season.

Shantung as a trimming and as a material for stretching over hats is a feature of many of the Paris novelties. It is used for facing panels and for lining coats.

Trimming for the Newest Suits.

Here is the model of postively the prettiest, daintiest thing in linen suits designed for women this year. The trimming is made of flat folds of the same material stitched on in the form of braiding. Some of these dainty summer clothes show the pattern in close, elaborate designs in spots, while others are decorated all over with long flowing lines, loops and curves. These suits in white, linen-color, and dainty shades make ideal accompaniment for the ever popular flower hats.

Value of Little Virtues.

Do not be troubled because you have not great virtues. God made a thousand spears of grass where he made one tree. The earth is fringed and carpeted not with forests, but with grasses. Only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint.

No Place for a Flirt.

The girl who gets work in an office for the purpose of chasing a man and capturing a lover or a live husband, is of no great service to her employer. Her chances for advancement are slight, and she might better spend her time at home helping to do the dishes. The caprices of the flirt are very apparent as air.

Her Reason.

"The reason that Belle Married Billie," said Lillian,
"Was simply because
He was rated a million.

"The panic came on
In a very short season;
Then Bill lost his cash,
And Belle lost her reason."
—Puck.

Comment Unnecessary.

"Your womanhood will gain nothing by suffrage and is losing every day in its dignity and its true influence by the hysterical clamor which is employed in the pursuit of this chimera," said Bishop Doane of New York to the graduating class in a noted school. Comment seems unnecessary.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Porch Clothesline.

If you have a back porch or any convenience of posts put galvanized screw hooks on inside of each post; cut your line of either rope or wire for the distances between, tying loops in the ends in each, which can be easily hooked off and on. Put away and keep clean when not in use.

Beans Brighten Burners.

Boil lamp burners in the water that beans have been boiled in.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Drilling for oil began a few days ago on the John Foster farm near Heltonville, by the Ohio Oil Company, which has leased much land in that vicinity.

Mrs. Sam Lochlin, of Hammond, allowed her 2-year-old son to play with her hand bag. The child opened it, found arsenic tablets, ate some and died.

With no food for five days and sleeping in box cars for several nights, Jacob Owens, aged 51, claiming to live at Columbus, Ohio, was picked up in Evansville unconscious and sent to a hospital. He may die. Owens came to Evansville to look for work.

Paul H. McNeill, of Bloomfield, has confessed robbing Isaac M. Vaugn, county recorder, of a purse containing $80. An affidavit was field against him. The mother of McNeil gave bond in the sum of $500. On account of the social standing of the McNeill family the affair has caused a sensation.

Jacob Luckey, for twenty years a teamster for the Diether Lumber Co. at Fort Wayne, was pinched under a falling lumber pile and he has eight ribs and his collar bone broken. Both jaws are bruised and he has a long scalp wound, besides internal injuries which may cause his death. He is 60 years of age.

John Young, a bachelor, aged 56, making his home with his brother, Thomas Young, northwest of Warren, near Plum Tree, shot himself in the forehead with a twenty-two caliber target rifle. Despondency over the death of his mother, together with poor health, is supposed to have been the cause of his act. The bullet penetrated the brain.

The mother of 17-months-old Helen Rosencranz will undergo an operation at Evansville and give up a part of the skin of her body to be grafted on the body of the child who was seriously burned last week when a gasoline stove exploded. The child was playing near the stove when the explosion occurred, and was badly burned about the breast and face.

While traveling forty miles an hour a flange on a wheel under the pony trucks of a Pennsylvania engine broke near Shelbyville, letting the pilot down, and the train ran a mile east of the city before being stopped. It is a mystery how the wheels remained on the track. A wrecking crew from Columbus had to sidetrack the engine and take the train to Columbus, after three hours' delay.

After nearly a year's effort and expending nearly $300, Fred Adrian, a young farmer living southeast of New Castle, has succeeded in getting possession of a gray mare which was stolen August 1, 1908, from a public hitching rack. By accident Mr. Adrian learned that his horse had been sold to a man near Columbus, Ohio. He immediately instituted suit for possession, but was unable to get his property. He carried the case to the higher court and was successful.

In a battle with cockroaches in the kitchen of a restaurant at Anderson, Miss Lizzie Rigdon, 32 years old, a cook, was probably fatally burned. She was spraying the walls and crevices with gasoline when a roach soaked with gasoline fell on a hot stove. Instantly a flash filled the kitchen, roaches were routed, but Miss Rigdon was carried out frightfully burned about her face, arms and chest, and her hair was half burned off. She also inhaled the flame. There was but little damage to the kitchen.

Tom Mauger, proprietor of the Indiana Harbor Express Company, bought a piece of limburger cheese and it has already cost him $200. Mauger's wife refused to tolerate it in the house, and so he tied it to a nail outside of his house and the hot weather did the rest. Mauger forgot about the cheese and his wife told him that there was something wrong with the plumbing. He employed a plumber and in searching through the pipes for defects in sewage, the plumber practically wrecked the house. Then Mauger remembered the cheese and the cause of the smell, and the plumbing bills are still coming in.

Fortunatus Miller, a well-known citizen of Elkhart, received word of the death of his mother at Three Rivers one day last week. He says he knew bad news was coming for the old clock which has been in the family 137 years stopped the midnight before, though just wound. He says it performed a similar trick before the death of his grandfather, his grandmother, his father, and each of the five brothers of his grandfather. The death of a cousin was presaged by the clock's striking three times at the exact time of his death. Mr. Miller is the only member of the family who will keep the clock. His mother was 92 years old and all of her eleven brothers and sisters lived to be very old, the youngest to die being 78 years.

Several days ago Mrs. Harrison Mounts noticed a sore place on the shoulder of her 2-year-old son Robert. She took him to a physician in Greensburg, who used a knife and found imbedded in the flesh a large needle.

Charles Watkins attempted to burn the County Jail at Shelbyville. He gathered a bed tick and blanket and removed his clothing, put all in a pile and set it on fire. The fire was burning fiercely when discovered, but was soon extinguished by Deputy Sheriff Laws. Watkins awaits commitment to an insane asylum.

William Warder Hamilton of Greensburg, sent up a paper balloon bearing his name and address on a card several days ago. Two days later he received a souvenir post card from Winchester, Ky., stating that the balloon had landed in that city. By air line Winchester is 150 miles southeast of Greensburg.

William and Jacob Evans, two small children, were at the home of Philip Yarling, near Shelbyville, and they were playing around a wind pump when they caught their hands in the machine. The boy had one finger taken off at the first joint and the girl, in trying to assist the boy, had one of her fingers taken off at the joint.

Carlius F. Kepper, foreman of the jointing shop of the Bauer Cooperage Works in Lawrenceburg, was struck in the right eye by a piece of steel from a circular saw that burst. The sight of the eye was destroyed and it is thought that he will lose the sight of the other eye. Kepper served as corporal in Company M, 161st Indiana Volunteers during the Spanish-American War.

John H. Luchtman, an aged farmer and veteran of the Civil War, was bitten by a rattlesnake on his farm, five miles south of Michigan City. He was mowing in a meadow and stopped to remove some grass that had choked the sickle, when he touched the reptile and it sank its fangs into his hand. His wrist was bound with twine and he was hurriedly taken to a hospital. He will recover. The snake was killed. It had five rattles.

Albert Shoaf, rural carrier on route No. 3 at Petersburg, has purchased an automobile and hereafter will use it in delivering the mail. Mr. Shoaf has had much trouble in keeping his horses in condition to travel twenty-five miles a day. By using an auto he can work three-fourths of the day for himself and at the same time draw his salary from the Government. If the experiment is successful, several other automobiles will be bought at once.

Lightning struck the same house twice within fifteen minutes during an electrical storm at Hagerstown. The first bolt tore the roof and weather-boarding from the northwest gable of the house owned by Arch Benbow. Less than fifteen minutes later a second crash came and Mr. Benbow was severely shocked. This bolt had entered the back kitchen, melted a nail where it entered, and run along a heavy oak stringer which was reduced to splinters as fine as matches. The fluid encountered a second nail and turned from its course and its trace was lost.

Detectives, following a trail of white flour from the Steck & Miller grain establishment in Muncie, arrived at the grocery of Elias Bromagen and there asked him whether he had not received a large quantity of stolen flour. Bromagen admitted that he had purchased of strangers in the middle of the night considerable flour about which he had asked no question, and he surrendered this. He also produced certain empty sacks that had contained flour stolen from the confectionery store of Charles Hinkley and said that he had obtained that from the same men. No arrests have been made.

When J. A. Landers, county treasurer at Martinsville, opened his mail a few days ago he found a money order for $2.14, accompanied by a letter from a former Morgan County citizen, in which the latter said he wished to correct a wrong committed in 1907, when he failed to list $100 worth of his personal property. He knew the tax rate for that year for his township and enclosed the proper amount. The writer did not mention the township, but Treasurer Landis made an examination and found which township had that rate and then found the man's name on the tax duplicate. The amount was put on the duplicate and a receipt was sent him for his taxes for that year. The man now lives in another part of this State.

BUTLER, INDIANA, FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1909

DOESN'T it sound funny to speak of "protecting" such infant industries as the steel trust and similar concerns? These corporations are not only big enough to take care of themselves but they have become the taskmasters of the American people. Is it not about time to give the everyday man a chance to save a little for his family?

Why Not?

SOME time ago the name of Jim Bingham, present attorney general of the state, was mentioned as a probable candidate for the nomination for governor on the republican ticket. It was looked upon as a joke at the time, but since then his name has been frequently mentioned in connection with the matter. The Hon. Mr. Bingham holds that his work in behalf of the county option law entitles him to recognition, to say nothing of his services to the party in the state. No matter what he thinks, he will not be in the running when the other aspirants for the place toe the mark in the spring of 1912.—Columbia City Post.

If the county option law is a thing that is to be used to boost republican politicians into big jobs why shouldn't Jim Bingham and J. Frank Hanly have the benefit of it? Isn't that just what the Hon. Jim and the Hon. J. Frank intended it for? Wasn't that one of the principle things back of the alliance between the anti-saloon league officers and the republican organization in the last campaign?

The Right Thing in the Right Way

SOME of the thick-and-thin republican papers of the state are still trying to make political capital out of the changes that have taken place in the management of the Jeffersonville reformatory. But it is uphill work. All papers and persons who knew the facts fully realize that if Governor Marshall did "force a change of management," as the republican organs say, then he did a mighty fine piece of work. The Jeffersonville institution was not being conducted as it should have been in scarcely a single particular. Superintendent Whittaker was the "whole thing," apparently, and he had not only turned the reformatory into a partisan institution in defiance of the bi-partisan law, but contracts for supplies were let contrary to law, and there was, it was charged, a relation between Whittaker and his subordinates on the one side and the prison contractors on the other which boded no good to the taxpayers and worked to the injury of the inmates of the prison by unlawfully prolonging their detention in the institution. It is now conceded by all except the extreme partisan organs that Governor Marshall not only did the right thing, but that he did it in precisely the right way.

Partisan Flapdoodle

THE Washington (Indiana) Herald is a republican paper and it is edited by Charles G. Sefrit, who maintains close relations with the republican state organization. So, therefore, when the Washington Herald says (as it has been saying recently) that Governor Marshall has "dodged" the temperance issue and "played both ends of the game," those who chance to read it will know what inspires it. As a matter of fact, no man ever took and maintained a more manly and consistent attitude on any question than did Mr. Marshall both during and after his campaign for the governorship. Every voter knew where to find him all the time. But he did not regard the temperance matter as the most important thing in the campaign or before the legislature. Governor Marshall ably maintained the democratic position on all of the questions before the people, steering a straight course all the time. The talk in republican papers about "dodging" and "playing both ends of the game" is mere partisan flapdoodle.

The Farmer and the Tariff

ABRAHAM LINCOLN once said that all of the people could not be fooled all the time. Of course this is true, but it is really remarkable how many people have been fooled so long by the word "protection" as used in our politics. One of the stock arguments of republican orators and newspapers has been that "protection" benefited the farmers. American farmers, however, are not helped but are harmed by the republican system of tariffs. On this subject the Columbia City Post says:

"The fact that Canadian farmers are getting as much for their wheat and pork as American farmers is not the only thing in their favor. The great advantages they have over the American farmer is in buying of farm machinery, implements and tools, to say nothing of clothing and household necessities and building material, all of which are sold in that country for a third less than in this country. This fact can be proven by making a trip to any part of Canada and making a few investments. Especially is the difference in the cost of clothing marked. It simply goes to show that the protective tariff idea is maintained in this country for the benefit the favored few can derive from it. While the people are the losers every time they make a purchase."

A Horrible Hold-Up

"About ten years ago my brother was "held up" in his work, health and happiness by what was believed to be hopeless Consumption," writes W. R. Lipscomb, of Washington, N. C. "He took all kinds of remedies and treatment from several doctors, but found no help till he used Dr. King's New Discovery and was wholly cured by six bottles. He is a well man today." It's quick to relieve and the surest cure for weak or sore lungs, Hemorrhages, Coughs and Colds, Bronchitis, La Grippe, Asthma and all Bronchial affections. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. As soon as a woman marries a man of means, the fortunes of her family begin to look up.

Next Thanksgiving day we propose to fast, and see if we can't feel decent the following Friday.

When you find a good husband, the women nearly always say: "His wife does not care much for him."

A man doesn't regard his children as kin; cousins, aunts and uncles, and that sort of thing, are kin.

Happy Homes

Unhappiness and poverty in families is often due to constant sickness. Disease usually starts somewhere in the stomach or intestines, and if you will take a remedy like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at the first approach of chronic constipation, indigestion, liver trouble, sick headache, etc., you are very sure not to have a serious disease. The remedy is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 26-1m

Kicking in the morning,
Kicking all the day;
Kicking if he's busy,
Kicking at delay.
Thus the chronic kicker
Kicks at friends and foes,
Frowning, grumbling, wrangling
Everywhere he goes.

Nothing ever suits him,
Always finding fault;
Every kind of pleasure
He is sure to halt.
Scowling at the children,
Growling at his wife;
Turning peace and comfort
Into constant strife.

Kicking if the weather
Happens to be dry;
Kicking when the rain is Tumbling from the sky.
Kicking in the summer—
Heat has then no charm;
Kicking in the winter—
Then he'd have it warm.

Kicking every meal-time,
Glaring at the meat;
Often he is saying,
"Nothing fit to eat!"
Kicking when he's reading,
Grumbling at the light;
Now and then denouncing
Everything in sight.

Kicking in the morning,
Kicking all the day;
Kicking in the evening,
Kicking should he pray.
Kicking while he's thinking,
Kicking when in bed;
Wonder if he'll keep on Kicking when he's dead?

Complaint is made that the republican party in Indiana is without a state organ, the Star and News, both of Indianapolis, being ardent in their support of Governor Marshall. But so long as Governor Marshall adheres to his present policy of giving all the people of the state a wise, just and honest administration—so different in many respects from what Indiana has enjoyed for several years—why shouldn't every newspaper in the state back him up? It shouldn't be so much a matter of party as it should be of better government.—Columbia City Post.

While coming home from Auburn the other evening Byron Mason ran across a dead man. Near Waterloo he came to a place in the road where a bridge had been removed and he had to go into a field to get around. In the glare of his headlights he could see an object ahead which seemed to be standing still. Placing one hand upon his trusty seven-shooter, he slowly worked his way up to the object, finding it to be a horse and buggy. He brought his machine to a standstill, alighted and led the animal out of the way and a close investigation disclosed a man dead drunk. Disturbing the man did not wake him, but his warm pulsation was sufficient evidence that it was a clear case of an overdose of stomach bitters.

What Our Brethern Say

The Butler Herald appears with its new editor and proprietor, A. S. Powers, in charge, he having purchased the newspaper plant from W. O. Kenan, who has owned it for the last four and a half years. Mr. Powers is a splendid newspaper writer, a business man of ability and with a personality that wins friends. He will prove popular in his new position and the Herald under its change will maintain its influence among the people of that section of the county. It has been one of the Courier's most valued exchanges, a live local newspaper, and we feel assured the new management will continue it as such. Mr. Kenan has not yet announced his future plans. He is held in high esteem by his many friends, is efficient as a journalist and a newspaper manager, and the Courier would regret to have him go out from among us.—Auburn Courier.

W. O. Kenan who has made the Butler Herald one of the best paying plants in this section of the state sold the paper last week to A. S. Powers, a former resident of Butler. He was raised in the Butler newspaper offices and knows all the ins and outs of the business. Mr. Kenan goes to the south-west where he will enter the newspaper field again.—Dawn.

A. S. Powers, recent publisher of the Independent at Edon, Ohio, has purchased the Butler Herald of W. O. Kenan, and has assumed possession, and the initial issue under his management presents a much improved appearance. Mr. Kenan expects to locate in the southwest where he will engage in the newspaper business. We wish both the retiring and incoming proprietors the best of success in the future.—Albion Democrat.

A. S. Powers has purchased the Butler Herald and is now in charge. Mr. Powers is a capable newspaper man with many years experience, and will give the people of DeKalb county a first class newspaper. He is a personal friend of the Truth editor, in fact spent many years in our employ. We extend our best wishes. Editor Kenan who retires will move to the south-west and again engage in the newspaper business.—Churubusco Truth.

T. & C. COMPANY WON OUT
REGULAR SCHEDULE RESUMED

Although cars were started to run over the T. & C. electric line on last Friday, the regular schedule was not resumed until Monday morning.

The cause of the strike seems to have been the apprehension of the men that the summer hourly schedule about to be adopted would result in a lowering of their wages. Accordingly the men asked for a new scale of pay: For the first six months, 20 cents an hour; the second six months, 21 cents; the third six months, 22 cents, and the fourth six months, 23 cents per hour.

Manager Purinton claimed that the hourly service would not work out to the disadvantage of the men's wages. However, he would present the matter to the receiver, and await his action. But later, upon Mr. Purinton's refusal to wire an immediate answer instead of waiting for it by mail, the men decided that their best interests would be subserved by walking out. Thereupon Mr. Purinton told them he would never take them into his employ again if they carried out their decision.

The men quit and the service of the company has been tied up since.

The former employes were served notice to call at the manager's office, deliver to the company their keys and other trainmen's equipment and get their pay. This they did and were formally dismissed from the company's service.

Twenty-one men are let out of employment. It will no doubt be a hardship for them, but as far as we can learn they are disposed to look at the situation, philosophically and make the best of it.

Wireless Control of the Ships of the Navy

If the plans outlined by the wireless experts of the Navy Department do not "gang aglee," and if the electrical company bidding for the contract is able to fulfill its part, it will be possible within two years' time for the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, sitting at his desk in Washington, directly to communicate with and control the movements of the Atlantic fleet by means of a telegraph instrument at his elbow or in the next room, even though the fleet may be cruising in the Caribbean or "skyhooting through the brine" in midocean.

All this is to be brought about by the installation in Washington of the highest power wireless telegraphy system yet devised, and a similar installation on board the ships of the fleet. The installation of this system will require the erection at the capital of the highest structure ever planned for wireless telegraph communication, a tower which will rise 600 feet in the air, and which will overtop the Washington monument by forty-five feet. It will be the second highest structure in the world used for the sending of wireless messages, the highest being the Eiffel tower in Paris, which was constructed before wireless telegraphy was a proved fact, and which is now used for a number of other purposes.

The project, says the Washington Post, is enough to stimulate the imaginations of even the most blase observers of modern scientific progress, of the men who have already classified aeroplanes with motor cars in their mental card indexes, and who have long since accepted the ordinary manifestations of wireless telegraphy as being quite as much a matter of course as the daily visits of the letter carrier.

It will place the United States away in the forefront of other nations in so far as the application of wireless telegraphy to naval purposes is concerned, and it will mark the first practical use of wireless telegraphy at long distances on an absolutely "sure-fire" basis, for the contract which is to be awarded will provide that the system shall transmit messages by day or by night from Washington to the ships of the fleet at any point within a radius of 3,000 miles, not snatches of messages, not isolated and unintelligible fragments, but complete messages.

The Navy Department has been working on the scheme for nearly two years, and bids were recently advertised for. An appropriation of $70,000 for the construction of the tower and of $100,000 for the purchase of the wireless instruments was already available.

The only company which submitted a bid which met the exacting requirements of the specifications was the National Electric Company, which controls the wireless patents of R. A. Fessenden, recognized as one of the foremost electrical experts in this country.

This company has an experimental station at Brandt Rock, Mass., and accompanying its bid was a statement that it was successfully sending messages across the Atlantic Ocean to a station on the west coast of Scotland and that messages from that station were being successfully received in this country. This statement was backed up by personal statements made by representatives of the company.

The naval authorities decided that they'd like to be "shown," and so Secretary Meyer decided to defer action on the bid until the company demonstrated its ability to do what it claimed. The bid was not rejected. It was merely held up. The company expressed its willingness to demonstrate to the complete satisfaction of the department that it could make good its promises, and during the summer, probably in August, an exhaustive series of tests will be made under the personal supervision of two of the wireless experts of the navy, Lieutenant Commander Cleland Davis and Lieutenant George C. Sweet.

Two scout cruisers will be equipped by the company with the Fessenden instruments, and messages will be sent to them from the station at Brandt Rock. Under a schedule to be decided upon later they will receive messages from this station varying from 100 to 3,000 miles.

The specifications require that the ships must be able to send messages to land from a distance of at least 1,000 miles. Prof. Fessenden said that it would be impossible for him to guarantee that messages could be sent from the ships to land at a greater distance. Any attempt to do so would necessitate the erection on each ship of an exceptionally high mast, which would not only be cumbersome, but extremely vulnerable as well.

Prof. Fessenden is positive in his assertion that the shore instrument will be capable of sending messages a distance of 3,000 miles, and that the instruments on the ships will be able to send complete messages a distance of 1,000 miles either to shore or to one another. The navy experts, after a preliminary investigation of his system, express themselves as being convinced that he will demonstrate the efficacy of his system, and that its practical use by the government will be an actuality within the next two years.

One of the particular advantages of the system is that by means of a "combination," which can be likened to the combination of a safe, absolute secrecy can be maintained in the transmission of messages. The sending instrument is attunable to a certain key, and the receiving instrument becomes automatically attuned to the same key as soon as the vibrations begin. This key can be changed several times during the sending of a message.

Even though there should be another instrument of the Fessenden model at work within the active radius of the naval instruments, it would not pick up the messages, because what may be termed the "basic combination" would not have been set. This is not scientific phraseology, but it will convey some idea to the lay mind of this particular attribute of the system.

Another great difficulty which Prof. Fessenden claims to have overcome in his system is the difficulty which has hitherto been experienced in sending wireless messages by daylight. There has never been any assurance that messages sent by daylight would be sure of transmission, darkness being to date the best time for the successful transmission through the air. To be sure, wireless messages are continually being sent by daylight, but sometimes they do not carry, and the operation of wireless telegraph stations during the hours of sunlight is at present far from satisfactory. Prof. Fessenden claims to have overcome this difficulty entirely. He will have to in order to fulfill the specifications, which require not only an absolute guarantee of secrecy, but a further guarantee that messages may be sent at any time, day or night, with perfect accuracy over the distances mentioned.

The tower which it is proposed to erect in Washington for the transmission of messages to the fleet will probably be constructed of concrete, and will be connected with the office of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation by wire, so that the messages will actually be sent and received from his very elbow. No location has yet been decided upon for the tower, though it is likely that it will be erected within the city proper. It has been decided to construct it in a location where it will not interfere in any way with the simple grandeur of the Washington monument.

The plans which have been prepared are purely tentative as yet. The detailed plans will not be prepared until the practicability of the wireless apparatus is demonstrated, and the work of construction will not be commenced until next spring at the earliest.

The Navy Department is at present operating about forty wireless stations on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The instruments with which these stations are equipped have sent and received messages to and from points 1,200 miles distant, but there is absolutely no certainty that they can do this at all times. That is where the weakness of the present systems in use is found. They are not absolutely reliable.

One day it will be possible to communicate with a ship at sea a distance of 600 miles. The next day it will be impossible to reach her when she is only 300 miles from land. The department counts its wireless stations as being fairly reliable at all times for distances varying from 150 to 200 miles.

The wireless station at the Washington Navy Yard, for instance, frequently picks up messages sent from Colon, on the Isthmus of Panama. Sometimes it will be an entire message. Then again it will be only a few disjointed and garbled words. Another time it will be only a single word. It has sent messages which have been received at Colon, too, and it has sent messages intended for that point, dozens of them, which got lost somewhere in the tangled currents of air and not a single word of which ever reached its destination.

When the fleet is maneuvering there is never any positive assurance that it can be reached except so long as it remains within from 150 to 200 miles of a coast station. It might be reached at a greater distance, but in time of war mights and possibys and maybes are not very substantial things to depend upon.

DREAM SAVES MAN'S LIFE.

During Sleep Wife Saw Him Injured in Bad Railroad Wreck.

Mrs. Charles Hager, wife of a railroader employed on the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, probably saved her husband from death or serious injury by a dream she had a few nights ago. She dreamed that she saw him in a bad wreck, and that he was dreadfully injured. The dream made such an impression upon her that she told him and asked him to exercise unusual care for the next several days, said she believed that there was to be an accident to his train, and said he might escape if he kept well to the rear of it. Hager was also impressed, and took care not to place himself in jeopardy. Next day, when his train was in New York State, the accident occurred, being caused by spreading rails. Hager was injured less than any other man of the crew. The engineer and fireman were fatally hurt.

FORMER SLAVE CHIEF MOURNER

91-Year-Old Negress Walks Ten Miles to "Old Massa's" Funeral.

A pathetic scene was witnessed at the funeral of Joshua Ewing, of Fulton, Mo., who was buried at Mokane. A negro woman, Clara Ewing, 91 years old, who had belonged to the family of the father of the deceased before the Civil War, and who is now an inmate of the County Poor Farm, heard of the funeral and escaped from the institution and walked to the cemetery, a distance of ten miles. She sat through the services and when the mourners filed in line to take a last look at the corpse, the aged negress stood at the bier and sobbed loudly for several minutes. Captain Patrick Ewing, father of the deceased, had owned the woman as a slave, and had sold her to a neighbor. The son, Joshua Ewing, soon afterward bought her back for $600 and gave her her liberty.

TRAGEDY OF A BUNGALOW.

Remarkable Career of the Beautiful Woman Mysteriously Slain.

What mystery, romance and tragedy may be crowded into one short life! In her brief 22 years there came to the victim of the Maryland bungalow tragedy more variety, more triumph, more heart-burning, more tragedy than come to half a dozen generations of some families. Cradled in mystery, rescued from the slums, bred in luxury, worshiped by statesmen, pursued bp tragedy, torn by conflicting loves, anchored nude and dead in a Maryland bayou. Such in brief was the career of Edith May Thompson Woodill, the woman whom Lame Bob Eastman, the absconding New York broker, butchered in his secluded shanty near St. Michael's, Maryland, the slayer taking his own life when it came to a choice between death and capture.

What is known of the history of this remarkable woman begins in 1890. In that year Colonel Charles A. Thompson and his wife were at Minneapolis. Mrs. Thompson was engaged in slum work and one day was attracted by the loveliness of an unwashed child, 3 years old, who was in the keeping of a street car conductor. The Thompsons adopted the child and it was she whose nude body, with the skull crushed and weighted by an iron kettle, was found recently in Broad Creek, near St. Michael's.

Sixteen years ago the Thompsons bought the estate near McDaniel, Md. There the girl, known as Edith May Thompson, grew up in surpassing loveliness and completely won the heart of Charles Thompson, her foster brother. This youth brought the first conscious tragedy into the young woman's life. Young Thompson and the girl played together as children, and they grew up as as brother and sister. When the youth learned they were not bound by blood he desired the girl for his wife, but she told him she never could look upon him as other than her brother. She possessed a sensitiveness in the case which Thompson lacked. He threatened to kill himself, and with her arms around his neck she implored him not to do violence to himself.

"You know, Charlie, we've been brother and sister," she said. "I love you, love you with all my heart, but I never, never will marry you."

The youth took the girl by the wrists and flung her from him. He left her without speaking a word, and once out of her sight he fired a bullet into his brain. She turned for solace to her foster mother, and the woman and girl were inseparable until Mrs. Thompson died, three years ago. And now the body of the young woman lies between the graves of her foster mother and the foster brother who had given his life for love of her.

But before young Thompson died by his own hand other interests had come into the girl's experience. Soon after the Thompsons moved from Minneapolis to the Maryland estate Lyman J. Gage, the famous Chicago financier and Secretary of the Treasury under McKinley, became a frequent visitor to the house. Gage made no secret of his love for the child; he frankly said he "worshiped her shadow." He watched the child grow; he took personal direction of her education.

When the child was 12 years old Gage took her to his home in Washington. It was at that time she sang before President McKinley and his wife in the White House. She had a sweet contralto voice, and Mrs. McKinley took the child on her knee and kissed her and said her singing was beautiful. For three years the girl alternated between the Thompson estate and the Gage home. When she was 15 years old Gage sent her to Paris to study music. Mrs. Thompson lived with her in Paris, and the expenses of both were paid by Gage; he insisted upon that against the wish of Col. Thompson and his wife.

At the end of a year she returned to this country on a visit, and, expressing a desire to stay in America, Gage sent her to Boston. She had just celebrated her seventeenth birthday and was pursuing her music in Boston when she met Dr. Walter W. Caswell, a Boston osteopath. He was carried away by the frail beauty of the girl, and after a wooing of two weeks they were married. She telegraphed the news of the wedding to Secretary Gage, who went at once from Washington to Boston. He saw the girl there, and what took place at the interview between them is not known. A few weeks later the girl went to Baltimore and entered the Peabody Conservatory. She was known as Miss Edith Thompson, and she kept secret the fact of her marriage. This marriage within a couple of months was annulled, and to the few friends in her confidence the young woman said she always had regretted the romance, which ended in the tragedy involving her foster brother.

The girl lived quietly for a couple of years with her foster father and his daughter, Miss Carrie Thompson. She paid one visit to New York, and when there became engaged to Harry Adams of Mount Vernon, N. Y., a traveling salesman. In April, 1908, she went to California, at the time being engaged to Adams. A month later she sent word of her marriage to Woodill, an automobile dealer in Los Angeles. The couple occupied a large house in the fashionable quarter of Los Angeles, and a month ago Mrs. Woodill laid the corner stone of a beautiful home being built for her by Gage.

Then came the visit east, the meeting with Robert E. Eastman, an apparent mutual infatuation, the refusal of the woman to rejoin her husband, and finally the murder of the woman and suicide of Eastman.

STOCKING DYE KILLED HER.

Amputation of Woman's Leg After Accident Didn't Save Her.

Mrs. Phoebe Clayton, housekeeper for T. Edward Jeffries of Freehold, N. J., is dead in the Monmouth Memorial Hospital, Long Branch, of blood poisoning after her right leg had been amputated because of gangrene. She was 30 years old and a widow. She was driving for her little daughter, Mildred, to Georgia school, and had a small boy with her. About two miles outside of Freehold the child's hat blew off and Mrs. Clayton turned the horse around to get it. The runabout went over and Mrs. Clayton and the little boy were thrown out. The youngster wasn't hurt, but Mrs. Clayton's right leg was broken above the ankle and there was a deep hole in the calf of the leg, extending to the bone, in which bits of colored stocking were imbedded. The dye in the stocking, it is believed, caused the gangrene.

Mr. de Temper—He is probably a married man.—New York Weekly.

Spoiled the Performance.

The play was all about a horse—a famous horse, the autobiography of which is even yet among the "best sellers," and over the sufferings of which thousands of readers have shed tears of sympathy. The four-legged actor that had been cast for the part of the horse was doing his best, presumably to look pathetic.

With drooping head, it stood on the stage, from time to time switching its poor docked tail. One of the two-legged actors was delivering an impassioned and really touching speech, when the audience suddenly burst into a fit of prolonged and uncontrollable laughter.

The oration came to a sudden stop. The actor glanced at the horse, then turned and fled in dismay behind the scenes.

"Black Beauty" was yawning.

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

It's a matter of general interest just now how one's physical condition can be got into shape to best receive the benefits of the summer season. Especially is this true of the children. They have become run down by a winter of unnatural manner of living because of ill-considered food and much time spent indoors. Spring comes with its sunshine, its fresh vegetables and all else invigorating, but the children are in no condition to receive nature's remedies.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does to-day. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

Much is printed nowadays about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCrann has. Not only do these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that, too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine or other baneful narcotic.

Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines. Hall's Journal of Health, however, says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."

Buried Treasure in Morocco.

In Morocco it is customary for a man to bury most of his riches in a place known only to himself. This custom is practiced by all Moors, for they cannot trust them directly it was known where the money was.

At the death of the head of a family in Morocco, digging operations commence at once, but seldom is the money discovered. There must be many fortunes buried away in odd corners of the country. An instance came under the writer's notice at one of the coast towns. During the demolition of a house a considerable sum of money was found built into the wall.

Eccentric Count Bertrand.

Count Bertrand, who lived in Paris, was a very eccentric man, and to one of his eccentricities he ascribed his long life. Once a year he would betake himself to bed and stay there for three months. On these occasions he would see no one but his servant, who brought him his meals, and even him he forbade to speak. Just before the Germans began the siege of Paris the count went to bed, and the servant, true to his injunctions, said nothing of the events going on around him. One day the bread proved so bad the count demanded an explanation, whereby, of course, he learned that Paris was encompassed by the enemy. Springing out of bed, the count paced the floor, repeating, "What should a Bertrand do under such circumstances?" Suddenly he stopped, exclaiming, "We should go to bed!" and to bed he went, and stayed there until the siege was over.

Autos Might Be Cheaper.

A suit that may result in sensational disclosures has been brought against three members of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers. The defendants are the Locomobile Company of America, the George N. Pierce Company, of Buffalo, and the H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company, of Syracuse. They are accused by the Flint Automobile Company of Flint, Mich., of compelling the latter to go out of business by threatening suits against its customers for alleged infringement of a patent. This action is brought under the Sherman anti-trust law, and it is charged that the auto companies formed an association in 1903 including 70 per cent of the persons or firms in the automobile trade "to raise and maintain artificially the price of gasoline automobiles, and to regulate and restrict artificially the output of such automobiles and the trade and commerce therein." The Flint company declares that it was not infringing on any patent, and that the threats against it were made solely to drive it out of business. The outcome of the case is being watched with great interest, Leslie's Weekly asserts, and it is said that if the alleged combination is broken up the prices of automobiles will be reduced.

Origin of Surnames.

Surnames were introduced into England by the Normans and were adopted by the nobility about 1100. The old Normans used Fitz, which signifies son, as Fitzherbert. The Irish used O for grandson—O'Neal, O'Donnell. The Scottish Highlander used Mac, as Macdonald, son of Donald. The Welsh used Ap, as Ap Rhys, the son of Rhys, Ap Richard. The prefix Ap eventually was combined with the name of the father; hence Prys, Pritchard, etc. The northern nations added the word son to the father name, as Williamson. Many of the most common surnames, such as Johnson, Wilson, Dyson, Nicholson, etc., were taken by Brabanters and others, Flemings, who were naturalized in the reign of Henry VI., 1435.

SKIN ERUPTION CURED.

Was So Sore, Irritating and Painful that Little Sufferer Could Not Sleep—Scratched Constantly—Cuticura's Efficacy Proven.

"When about two and a half years old my daughter broke out on her hips and the upper parts of her legs with a very irritating and painful eruption. It began in October; the first I noticed was a little red surface and a constant desire on her part to scratch her limbs. She could not sleep and the eruptions got sore, and yellow water came out of them. I had two doctors treat her, but she grew worse under their treatment. Then I bought the Cuticura Remedies and only used them two weeks when she was entirely well. This was in February. She has never had another rough place on her skin, and she is now fourteen years old. Mrs. R. R. Whitaker, Winchester, Tenn., Sept. 22, 1908."

A Dangerous Place.

When the news-gatherer for the Willowby Clarion was admitted, one of the first visitors, to the old Parker house, recently bought and fitted up by the Historical Society, he was able to get a full column of interesting information for the next issue of the paper.

"Doesn't seem to me it'll be safe for folks to go to the old Parker house, without they take some precautions," said Samuel Hobart, the village wag, when he had finished the reporter's account of what he had seen. "Lem Colburn had a pretty narrer escape, by what he tells in this paper."

"What does he tell?" demanded Mrs. Hobart.

"I'll read it out," said her husband, and proceeded slowly:

"'On first entering the hall, the visitor's eye is caught by a long sword over one side of the mantel, and then drawn to the old flint-lock on the other-side; after which it naturally falls on the mantel itself, and from that to the old brick-tiled hearth.'

"Now if Lem's eyes can stand that kind o' treatment, they must be pretty tough."

What He Wanted.

Young Mr. Charles was plainly embarrassed, and Miss Smith knew what was coming, or thought she did.

"Er—Miss Smith," he said feverishly, "could I—er—see your father for a moment or two?"

"Certainly, Mr. Charles!" And, excusing herself, she swept from the parlor.

Presently the old man came in, and, after a short conversation with Mr. Charles he stepped to the door and summoned his daughter.

Mr. Charles, whose face was radiant, said, "As I have a long ride before me, I think I will say good-night."

"Oh, papa," pleaded the girl immediately her lover disappeared, "did he—did you—"

"I did," broke in the old man.

His daughter fell on his neck and kissed him. He held her at arm's length.

"I did," he repeated. "I lent him a nickel to get home with—that was what he wanted me for."

Making History.

When Kinglake was writing his history of the Crimean war he received letters from all sorts of people concerned in the war. One day a letter with a deep black border came from two people in the colonies, husband and wife, describing their grief. Their only child had been killed in the Crimea. They wanted to have him mentioned in the "History of the Crimean War." Kinglake was touched and replied by post that he would do his best if they would send him the necessary particulars. Again a letter, also black bordered, full of thanks, but with the following conclusion: "We have no particulars whatever to give you. He was killed on the spot, like many others, but anything you may kindly invent will be welcome. We leave it entirely to your imgaination."—London Chronicle.

SURPRISED HIM.

Doctor's Test of Food.

A doctor in Kansas experimented with his boy in a test of food and gives the particulars. He says:

"I naturally watch the effect of different foods on patients. My own little son, a lad of four, had been ill with pneumonia and during his convalescence did not seem to care for any kind of food.

"I knew something of Grape-Nuts and its rather fascinating flavour and particularly of its nourishing and nerve-building powers, so I started the boy on Grape-Nuts and found from the first dish that he liked it.

"His mother gave it to him steadily and he began to improve at once. In less than a month he had gained about eight pounds and soon became so well and strong we had no further anxiety about him.

"An old patient of mine, 73 years old, came down with serious stomach trouble and before I was called had got so weak he could eat almost nothing, and was in a serious condition. He had tried almost every kind of food for the sick without avail.

"I immediately put him on Grape-Nuts with good, rich milk and just a little pinch of sugar. He exclaimed when I came next day, 'Why, doctor, I never ate anything so good or that made me feel so much stronger.'

"I am pleased to say that he got well on Grape-Nuts, but he had to stick to it for two or three weeks, then he began to branch out a little with rice or an egg or two. He got entirely well in spite of his almost hopeless condition. He gained 22 pounds in two months, which at his age is remarkable.

"I could quote a list of cases where Grape-Nuts has worked wonders."

"There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A Good Strainer Is Necessary.

Dirt-carrying bacteria once in the milk has done its harm, and no number of strainers of any kind yet invented can take out the pernicious germs. The best strainer for the average dairyman is a metal vessel, as shown in the cut, with a wire screen of 100 wires to the inch. A wire screen on a strainer should be replaced as soon as it becomes broken or rusted. The only satisfactory way to clean the screen of a strainer is with a small, stiff brush. The best kind of a strainer is one with the screen on the sides, rather than on the bottom, for then there is no undue pressure, which sometimes forces small particles of dirt through the screen. The screener cannot be counted upon to make up for previous carelessness in milking. Scientists say that a poor strainer may even increase the bacterial content of milk. In using cheesecloth or thick linen for straining milk it should not only be boiled after use, but should then be wrapped in a paper and baked in the oven for thirty minutes and then kept wrapped up until time to use again.—Farm and Home.

Milking.

Milking under quiet, favorable conditions is quite important, for the following reasons plainly set forth by John Burroughs, the eminent naturalist, in speaking of the supposed power of cows to "hold-up" their milk. Says Mr. Burroughs: "Most farmers and country people thing that the 'giving down' or 'holding up' the milk by the cow is a voluntary act. In fact, they fancy that the udder is a vessel filled with milk, and that the cow releases or withholds it just as she chooses. But the udder is a manufactory; it is filled with blood from which the milk is manufactured while you milk. This process is controlled by the cow's nervous system; when she is excited or in any way disturbed, as by a stranger, or by taking away her calf, or any other cause, the process is arrested and the milk will not flow. The whole process is as involuntary as is digestion in man, and is disturbed or arrested in about the same way."—Missouri Dairyman.

Truck Patch and Orchard.

When one of our Western farmers goes down East he is impressed with the fact that the truck patch, the orchard, the poultry yard and the dairy are relatively of vastly greater importance than in his country where broad fields of grain, alfalfa, spuds and sugar beets are in fashion and big bunches of beef cattle enliven the landscape. The great cities, some of them containing more people than the entire State of Colorado, must be fed from the farms. The products of the West are mainly such as may be readily transported over long distances. But milk, vegetables and small fruits are better, as well as cheaper, if produced near the place of consumption and this line of agriculture has from the exigency of things become the industry of Eastern farmers.—Field and Farm.

Starting Indians as Farmers.

The Cheyenne River Agency will be busy for some time to come, as the distribution of live stock to Indians has commenced. To each head of a family is to be given twenty-three head of 2-year-old heifers, or in case he so desires a team of mares, a wagon and harness, agricultural implements, five cows and $50 in cash, says the Pierre correspondent of the St. Paul Dispatch.

This distribution means that to any of the Indians who desire will be given a start of about $1,000 in value either toward starting a herd of cattle or beginning farming operations without any expense.

Thorough Cultivation.

If the ground is cultivated often enough no weeds can grow, and if the ground for a crop is carefully prepared before putting in the seed, by deep plowing and frequent harrowing, the cultivation required after the plants are up need not be more than 1 inch deep. If this is done after every rain there can be no weeds, and they will become fewer every year, while the cultivation will prevent loss of moisture in the soil by affording a loose covering of dry earth.

Feeding Manure to Plants.

Our people are perfectly satisfied that they can put character into milk and cream and butter by feeding the dairy cow a properly balanced ration and all that she will properly stand. The cow is simply a machine, the soil is simply a machine, and the cabbage head is a machine into which we can put a certain amout of material and turn out from it so many dollars. If you feed this vegetable matter, with high-grade nitrogenous manure you can make it pay.

Acidity and Butter Flavor.

It has been a generally accepted theory among teachers of and writers on dairy subjects that the production of good butter necessitates the development of a certain amout of acid in the cream, for two reasons, to develop a desirable flavor and to improve the keeping quality. Recent investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture indicate, however, that butter made from Pasteurized sweet cream has better keeping qualities and remains free from objectionable flavors for a longer time than butter made from sour cream. If these facts are established it might seem that in the years to come only sweet cream would be bought for butter making.

Commercial Egg Farm.

The production of market eggs is probably the safest branch of the poultry business, and the amount of capital invested need not be very large. In the New England States, New York and New Jersey there are many commercial egg farms, keeping from 500 to several thousand hens. The farmers, too, in this section of the country keep large flocks for eggs for the Eastern markets, and all seem to be doing well and making money. What we need in the South is more egg farms. Lands are cheap, material for housing and labor cheap, and, again, it is not necessary in the South to build such expensive houses. We have every advantage in the Southland for producing eggs at a less cost than our Northern brothers, and with quick and satisfactory railroad facilities to the Eastern markets the South should become the greatest poultry producing section of the entire country.

Other branches of the poultry industry may pay better than egg farming, but none are attended with so little worry and risk and are so certain of steady returns and a fair remuneration for the time and money expended.

Early Plowing Always Best.

Last summer we got a field of wheat stubble about half plowed when other work called us away. The remaining stubble was turned under early this spring, and the whole field planted to corn. The corn on last summer's plowing is now several inches taller than that on the land plowed this spring, and is ranker and better in every other way.

There is a difference between summer and fall plowing, the difference being in favor of the summer plowing. Turning a green growth into the soil seems to be very much better than turning an equal growth under, but waiting until it has matured and dried before doing it. Here on this farm we aim to do all the plowing possible this summer. It may be hot work but the days are long and one does not need to hurry the teams. Not only is it better to get the work done as soon as possible for any crop to be sown this fall, but our experience proves to us that the earlier the better if corn is to be the next crop.—Farmer's Mail and Breeze.

A Hog Shelter.

The form of individual hoghouse shown in the illustration is 6 feet square on the ground and both doors are hinged so they will open and close readily; 12 foot boards make the side and roof. Use good soft pine flooring, as it is lighter and much easier to move when necessary than heavier lumber; four pieces 2x4 inch and 6 feet long are for sills; two pieces 2x4 inch and 6 feet long are for ridge and plate. The door in the roof can be opened when the sun shines. Sunshine is the best tonic known for little pigs in early spring, and the door is essential when the sow needs attention at pigging time as a means of entrance and, as is sometimes the case, a very hasty exit.—Breeders' Gazette.

INDIVIDUAL HOGHOUSE.

Dairy Notes.

Butter methods are gradually gaining favor.

Working to the best advantage means using brains.

Cold and overfeeding will kill the young calf more quickly than anything else.

Don't try to keep a cow for milk and beef. She will disappoint you every time.

The man with a "dual purpose" dream usually wakes up to find that he is in the beef business.

It's just about as hard to get a good heifer out of a scrub as it is to make water run up hill.

The creamery patron has his monthly cream checks while the other fellow has the store bill.

Every hand separator is built to take care of a certain amount of milk. Don't feed it above capacity.

The best way to insure high prices for dairy products is to make them so good that the people can't help eating them.

The ordinary man may be judged by the company he keeps, but the dairy farmer is judged by the cows he keeps.

The manure spreader will help you to better returns from your dairy herd because it will make the manure more valuable to the land.

Don't sell a good cow because the other fellow offers a big price for her. She is worth just as much to you as she can possibly be to him.

There's a close relation between the type of a cow and her performance, but it is no more marked than the relation between the type of her owner and what he does in the dairy business.

Preserving "Don'ts."

Don't use cold water for jellies; measure the strained fruit juice; for every pint allow one pound of the best granulated sugar, put it on a platter in a warm oven to heat and add it to the boiling water.

Don't put hot preserves in cold glasses or jars and not expect accidents; place the glasses or jars in scalding water, rinse well and fill as quickly as possible.

Don't allow preserves to stand about after they are cold, but put melted paraffine on and cover with the lids, wash off every trace of stickiness and put in cool, dark place until ready to be used.

Don't allow preserves to cook over a hot fire and not expect them to scorch or burn.

Don't let them cook without stirring even when the fire is slow.

Don't cook preserves on a gas stove without an asbestos mat.

Don't use a steel knife to pare fruit with; use a silver knife.

Soap for Removing Spots.

Chip three-fourths of a bar of good laundry soap into one or two gallons of water; let stand over night till dissolved. Then add three ounces of white sugar, two ounces of honey and one and one-half ounces of turpentine and boil together till it drops off the end of a spoon. Remove from fire and let cool. Then cut into bars. This is an excellent soap for cleaning men's clothing and washing all woolen and cotton fabrics, as it restores the colors.

Italian Ice.

Put two cups of granulated sugar and one quart of water on to boil, add two cloves, a tiny bit of mace and the shaved rind of one-half a lemon. Boil ten minutes and turn it over one quart of fresh raspberries. Add one heaped tablespoonful of gelatine which has been soaked in cold water till soft, and the juice of two lemons. Strain through cheesecloth and when cold turn into the freezer and freeze as usual.

Removing Fruit Jar Covers.

Fruit jar covers may be removed from the jar by filling a small pan half full of hot water, inverting the jar in it, and letting it stand a few minutes. The cover can then be easily removed and is as good as new. By the old method of inserting a knife under the rubber, the cover is often bent, and will cause the loss of fruit if it is used again.—Success.

Chicken Bouillon.

A delicious bouillon results when a few bones and pieces of veal and beef are cooked along with the fowl, which is placed in the pot entire, to be oven-baked later as a separate dish. The broth is to be cleared with white of egg and served with squares of butter-browned toast. Bouillon should be highly flavored, aromatic and of a clear amber color.

Egg Biscuit.

One quart flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, pinch of salt, one-third cupful sugar, piece of butter size of an egg; mix with one cupful of milk to a soft dough, add two well-beaten eggs, mix and roll out and cut in small biscuits, bake in a quick oven.

Green Currant Pie.

Stew and mash one pint of green currants until the skins of all are burst, using as little water as possible, and not have the currants burn; add sugar enough to make it very sweet and one soda cracker rolled fine. Bake between two crusts.

Short Suggestions.

A tasty addition to ham sandwiches is a pickle or two minced with the cold meat.

A cupful of ripe olives added to the beef stew just before it is taken off improves it wonderfully.

A dainty fruit salad is made of white cherries, bits of orange and bananas, served on lettuce, with French dressing.

The handles of knives should never be immersed in water, or after a time they would become discolored and loose.

For a change add to the scrambled eggs half a dozen mushrooms cut into bits and cooked in a teaspoonful of butter with half a green pepper minced fine.

A relish made of one can of pimentoes, mixed with finely chopped celery, is well liked. It is covered with French dressing and served on lettuce leaves.

Watery custard is caused by cooking in an oven that is too hot. Set the custard in a pan of hot water, and see that it does not boil during the baking.

Heat a lemon thoroughly before squeezing it; you will obtain nearly double the quantity of juice that would be obtained if it were not heated.

When making pea soup, if the peas are boiled a little while, separately, with a pinch of common washing soda, they will be found to cook much more quickly. They do not need soaking.

Save one or two turkey wings. They are the best brushes in the world to use around a stove and they are splendid for sweeping closet shelves. Weight the wing tip with an iron until it dries.

By salting the water when poaching eggs they are rendered whiter and clearer than without this help. A certain French cook adds half a tablespoon of vinegar to every two quarts of water when poaching eggs.

When making gravy add a little parsley to the grease before putting in the flour, remove it after it is thoroughly cooked, add the flour, and see what a delightful change it makes in the ordinary beef gravy.

FLOATING A WHALE.

Inflating the Monster Carcass to Keep It on the Surface.

"Then began the work of bringing the whale to the surface and blowing it up so that it would float," says a writer on whaling in Popular Mechanics. "Taking a hitch about a convenient post, the rope was slacked and run through a pulley block at the masthead to relieve the strain of raising the great body. The winch was set in motion, and for fifteen minutes nothing was heard save the monotonous grind as fathom after fathom of line was wound in. When the body was brought alongside the lobes of the flukes were cut off and lifted to the deck. Then a long coil of small rubber hose, one end of which was attached to a pump and the other to a hollow, spear pointed tube of steel with perforations along its entire length, was brought into play. The spear was jabbed well down into the whale's side, the air pump was started, and the body slowly filled with air. When inflated sufficiently to keep it afloat, the tube was withdrawn, the incision plugged with oakum and the chains cast off. A buoy with a flag was then attached to the carcass and the whole set adrift to be picked up at the end of the day's hunting."

Curious Mourning Custom.

A curious mourning custom obtains among Central Australians, who, although representing perhaps the lowest and most degraded type of human beings, have managed to evolve a most complex system of rites and ceremonies, which govern almost every action of their lives. When a husband dies the widow paints herself all over with white pigment, and for the space of a year must not exhibit herself to a male member of the tribe on pain of death. For the rest of her life, unless she marries again, which is sometimes allowed, she must not speak, but communicates with the other women by means of a sign language, consisting of movements of the hands and fingers, which has been developed by these savages to a marvelous extent, and by which their limited stock of ideas can be fully expressed.—Dundee Advertiser.

Most of us owe debts of gratitude to strangers whose kindly smile has sent sunshine into our aching hearts, and has given us courage when we were disheartened.

It is a great thing to go through life with a smiling face. It costs little, but who can ever estimate its value?

Think how the pleasure of life would be increased if we met smiling faces everywhere—faces which radiate hope, sunshine and cheer! What a joy it would be to travel in a gallery of living pictures radiating hope and courage!

Who can estimate what beautiful, smiling faces mean to the wretched and the downcast—those whose life burdens are crushing them?

Many of us carry precious memories of smiling faces which we glimpsed but once, but whose sweet, uplifting expression will remain with us forever.—Success Magazine.

Always Time for Courtesy.

That there was always time for courtesy was a law of life indeed with those rare and kindly spirits who belonged to the golden age of American life and literature, but in the storm and stress of modern life and money getting the situation is more as Whittier expressed it in his consideration of the spiritualism of his day: "I sometimes say with Shakespeare: 'O for some courteous ghost,' but nothing ever comes to me."—Vernon Murray.

WINGED TRAVELERS.

A Living Flood Hurrying on to the Haven of Its Desire.

Early in August the flight began, and now, far overhead, there is a constant stream of feathered migrants, a living flood upborne by the clouds and hurrying on to the haven of its desire, writes a nature lover. Even the casual observer of nature can see that bird life is a changing thing, a matter of constant varyings, of infinite variety. No two months of the year are alike, as far as our bird population is concerned. In winter bird life is at its minimum; in June at its maximum, and between the two there is a constant fluctuation. And now, just at the end of summer, a host of travelers is making its way south; a huge army, welcomed by the best and most discerning folk of the sunny land, given free entertainment, untroubled with baggage and time table. They are not millionaires, disporting themselves in private cars. They are much more important to the world's enjoyment; they are the life and beauty of forest and field. Everyone is sorry to see them go, and sends a heartfelt farewell after them.

Any night of this early autumn, when we sit out under the open sky, we can hear twitterings from midair, fanning wings and confused calls from bird travelers hurrying past. If we would search the heavens with field glass on a moonlit night we would find some groups stealing a march on the watchful enemies of daytime, some moving slowly, laboriously; others, like the wild ducks, at the rate of over a mile a minute. Hour after hour, both by day and night, they pass, and in the spring, no doubt, every one of these birds that has survived will reverse the tedious journey. Why do they travel so swiftly and so far? What relentless impulse drives them back and forth, north and south, here to-day, there to-morrow?

What are they, and where are they going? Perhaps there are nighthawks on their way down from Alaska to Patagonia, a trifling yearly journey of some 6,000 or 8,000 miles; bobolinks going to winter in South America, plovers that go from the Arctic circle back to Argentina—winged travelers flying night and day, tireless as the wind, flock after flock, army after army, camping here a day to forage, there a week to rest, obeying laws which we don't know, but they do know, and guided in their long flight only by coastal lines and river courses, guided very seldom—so far as has been observed—by mountain crests. At one time they are in the north, clearing the orchards of insect pests that are overrunning the land; again in the south, gleaning the harvest fields and hay stubble.

THE COMMON LADY-BIRD.

Few Are Aware of Her Services to Florists and Gardeners.

Everybody knows the common lady-bird, but not every one is aware of the immense services rendered by this insect to florists and gardeners. Most insects are harmful to vegetation, their larvæ generally eating the leaves of whatever plant the eggs may be laid on, and it has been calculated that the larvæ or caterpillars of some varieties of beetles eat a hundred thousand times their own weight of vegetable food before they attain their full size and begin to spin their cocoons.

The lady-bird, however, is an exception, for both the larvæ and the beetle are carnivorous and feed on other insects, generally the aphis, which is so harmful to chrysanthemums and almost all other kinds of vegetation.

The lady-bug lays her eggs on the under side of the chrysanthemum leaf, and as soon as the larvæ are hatched they begin to prowl about the leaves and stems of the plant, looking for aphis or any other insect smaller than themselves. The larvæ simply hunt for, veritable tiger among the plant pests, food, but the full-grown lady-bug is a and will tear and slay even after she has eaten all she can possibly swallow. One lady-bird will destroy all the aphis on a large chrysanthemum in two or three days. Not one will escape. The aphis seem to recognize her as their natural enemy, and, although they have never seen a lady-bug before, as soon as one lights on a branch they turn tail and run, with every appearance of the most abject terror. Sometimes, when closely pursued, they let go all hold and drop off the branch in the hope of getting away. But they never do, for, once on their trail, the lady-bug hunts them down and tears them to pieces, apparently out of sheer malignant sport.

There seems no doubt that the benefits conferred by this tigerish insect were recognized ages ago. The name lady-bug, or lady-bird, is a contraction of "our lady's bird," for in the traditional lore of Italy, France and Germany the insect is sacred to the Virgin Mary, and centuries ago German children were taught that to harm or kill one of these insects was a sin. The idea is still prevalent among children, for in nine cases out of ten when a lady-bird is caught it is at once released after a recitation of the rhymes beginning, "Lady-bird, lady-bird, fly away home." In India, where the insects sometimes appear in considerable numbers, as they occasionally do also in Europe, they are so highly esteemed that in the folklore of the country when a lady-bird lights on any one he is immediately endowed with saintly virtues.

THE BABY.

A Comment on What Childhood Ought to Mean in a Community.

The saviors of men come ever as tender babes, says a baby lover, and there is no child ever born, in palace or hut, but carries with it the divine possibility of becoming a rescuer of its race. "You may be Christ or Shakespeare, little child, a savior or a sun to the lost world," says one child worshiper.

The wonder and mystery of a fresh young soul with all its infinite and immortal possibilities peering out of that tiny bundle of flesh may well make worshiping magic bow before every cradle of infancy. Forever, too, it is the children's crusade that moves in white and mystic procession on the pilgrimage to the holy sepulcher, the capture of the Holy City. Older feet have wearied of the march. "Age, aching hands," have dropped the sacred banner, but ever in zestful joy the white army of childhood gathers it up and moves in shining garments toward the Savior's tomb, the hallowed city. "Liberty bless you and keep you to be as you are," is the prayer that more than the poet might offer for the child's future, yet about the last one that society allows. Hence the world's loss.

Savages to restrain, rather than "slips of God" to foster, is a view that even sociologists encourage in the treatment of the child. Even a compromise between the two often leaves the case as one bright victim of our educational systems declared it when, to his teacher's question, "Johnny, what is a hypocrite?" he replied, "A boy wot comes to school with a smile on his face." Out of one of State schools for dependent children comes another picture of the boy with a smile on his face. "Dear papa," wrote this exploiter of happy childhood, "we children are having a good time here now. Mr. Sager broke his leg and can't work. Many children here are sick with the mumps. The man that is digging the deep well whipped us boys with a buggy whip because we dropped sand in his machine and made black and blue marks on us. Ernest cut his finger badly. We are all very happy."

The irrepressible spirits of childhood stand many a strain that cruel fate imposes, yet the stories of puny lads of 10 who kill themselves for a blow or heartless reproof show what a weight of heaviness is being brought to bear upon it. An Eastern writer recognizes this, in commenting upon a judge's advice to a father to try the old-fashioned remedy of the birch or strap for a recalcitrant youngster. He forgets, says the writer, that the boy of to-day is years and years older than the boy of yesterday. The spirit of the man and not the child is the one to appeal to, and though this may be well, and always was, where discipline is concerned, there is something woeful in it where a lost childhood goes with it.

The famous Frenchman's comment "Alas there are no longer any children," is one of the saddest in history, and Brigadier Lamb is right in claiming that the most pathetic feature of the high pressure and tension of modern life is that it takes hold of childhood and leaves us much as the Frenchman said, without any children. Even priggishness among children—mere infants of 3 or 4 years—is dolefully presented by the students of the times. And yet the author is right, too, who tells us that "only childhood is eternal," the one haunting voice that breathes forever through "the wistful song of humanity" and babbles of green fields and boyhood days, when the weary man drops the last vestige of humanity.

Whoever in life or song can best preserve the childhood notes comes nearest to finding the place "where joy resides and giving it a voice past singing."

The babe in the house may not be a well spring of pleasure to the landlord, but while poets and seers, to say nothing of some parents, can turn him to such good account, it is to be hoped that neither man nor germs, fashions nor divorce courts, will quite banish him from our midst.

DESCRIBED HEAVEN.

Man Whom Doctors Pronounced Dead Revived and Talked.

Although physicians had pronounced him dead, C. H. Coyler, a prominent citizen of Wheaton, Minn., and a candidate for the Legislature, revived and, apparently clear in mind, related a strange and graphic story of a visit to heaven. Then he admonished those at his bedside to lead better lives, and while praying his voice sank to a whisper and again the chill of death settled over him, this time the last. That, in brief, is the startling occurrence reported a few days ago.

About 9 o'clock in the evening Mr. Coyler sank rapidly, and finally was pronounced dead, those about him believing that the spirit had fled. An hour later his pulse beat again, and arousing himself he regained full consciousness. He informed those about him that he had been in heaven, and that it was a more beautiful place than any mind could imagine. He told his wife that he would return and would await her there. He told his brother that he had seen and talked with his mother, and assured him most earnestly that he was laboring under no delusion and was sincere in what he said. He then turned to the assembled friends and addressed them in words of admonition.

After offering the most inspiring prayer that those about his bedside had ever heard, he quietly passed away. It is said that his voice was strong, clear and distinct, and could be heard throughout the house, although an hour before it had gradually failed.

Mr. Coyler had not been known as a particularly religious man, though he was esteemed in the community for his fine character. Persons who knew him have been deeply impressed by his story.

RESULTS THAT REMAIN

Are Appreciated By Butler People

Thousands who suffer from backache and kidney complaint have tried one remedy after another, finding only temporary benefit. This is discouraging, but there is one special kidney medicine that cures permanently and there is plenty of proof right here in Butler.

Here is the testimony of one who used Doan's Kidney Pills years ago, and now states that the cure was lasting.

Mrs. Sadie Fee, N. Pearl Street, Butler, Ind., says: "I am glad to say that the cure made by Doan's Kidney Pills in our little boy's case has been permanent. The child was afflicted with a weakness of the kidneys and bed wetting was frequent. Finally I gave Doan's Kidney Pills a trial and they brought such great relief that in 1902, I publicly endorsed them. Up to this time my son has had no return of his former trouble and for that reason, I am glad to endorse Doan's Kidney Pills again."

Paint is to a Building

what clothing is to the body. It is just as important. You should take as much care in selecting the paint to clothe your property, as you do in selecting the material to clothe your person. Paint preserves the building. Paint gives beauty to the building. In painting the labor costs more than the paint. There will be a large waste if the right paint is not used.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINT

is made for painting buildings. It is not a low-priced paint, but it is cheap because the best. It is made of the purest materials that wear the longest. The colors are bright and handsome.

AGED FARMER COMMITS SUICIDE

Word was received here early Wednesday morning that Jacob Smith, living seven miles north east of town, had committed suicide by hanging. Coroner Fred Briggs and his clerk, Fred Webster, accompanied by Dr. L. H. Harrison, went immediately to the home of the aged farmer and found him hanging to a ladder with which he used for reaching the top of the hay mow of his barn. An official examination was made and the verdict was suicide by hanging. The opinion of the coroner is that the man had been dead between two and three hours, and that there was very little struggle as the last breath left his body. One arm rested on a hay rack which leaned against the mow while the other was thrown over a round in the ladder.

The deceased was 64 years of age and has been subject to epilepsy for several years. He is one of the old inhabitants of the county, and at one time was a citizen of Butler.

Mrs. Smith arose as usual on the morning of the tragedy at about five o'clock, having completed her breakfast she rang the bell, supposing her husband was doing his chores at the barn. After waiting a few minutes a grandson of Mr. Smith was sent to look for him, returning with the startling news.

The only excuse for the rash act is that he became suddenly demented, as there had been no trouble of any kind, either domestic or financial. He was comfortably situated, and had never shown any marked signs of insanity up to the time of his death.

He was a brother of John Smith, who died at his home in this city about a month ago. He leaves a widow and two sons.

FOUR MEN KILLED BY LAKE SHORE FLYER

The Bryan Democrat gives the following account of the killing of four foreigners who were killed on the Lake Shore tracks on last Friday afternoon:

Four foreigners, employed as extra section men on the Lake Shore, were instantly killed by passenger train No. 10 a few miles west of Bryan Friday afternoon. The men were killed while at work and the accident was the most horrible that has ever occurred in this vicinity.

The men were Peter Balid, Geo. Subu, Geo. Comita and John Pawl. They were part of the large gang of men employed by the Lake Shore in building additional tracks west of Bryan. They were shoveling gravel from the north track and a freight train was passing them on the south track. Passenger train No. 10 due here at 3:20 was coming from the west, running at the rate of sixty miles an hour. Because of the noise of the passing freight the men did not hear the approaching passenger train. A fifth man of the party looked up just in time and jumped clear of the passenger, escaping injury but seeing his four fellow workmen ground to pieces under the train. The men were all shoveling to the north and had their backs to the west. The testimony at the coroner's inquest showed that the engineer of the passenger saw the men at work and blew the whistle of his engine a number of times in an effort to warn the men of the train's approach.

The bodies of the four men, which were terribly mangled and bruised, were loaded on a car and brought to Bryan. Two were removed to Dillman's undertaking establishment, and Undertaker Deck took the other two to his place of business, using his new ambulance wagon purchased a few weeks ago. Coroner Wilbur, of West Unity, was notified of the accident and immediately came to Bryan to view the bodies. He held an inquest at Dillman's Saturday morning.

The four men had been residents of this country but a few years. They were all born in Austria Hungary, but came to this country from Roumania. Two of the men, Balid and Subu, have wives and families in Roumania, and Pawl has three children in the same country. A brother, brother-in-law and two cousins of Pawl are members of the same gang of section men he was with and all attended the funeral Sunday.

Balid was 24 years old. His head was crushed, neck broken and bowels cut open, besides other bruises. Comita was 21 years old and his body was cut and crushed beyond recognition. His head, limbs and one arm were all severed from the trunk, the pieces having been gathered up over a considerable distance of the railroad track. The body of Pawl was also badly crushed. His neck was broken, the head having been twisted half way around on the body. His back was broken, the bone protruding about a foot from the body. One arm was also severed. He was about 30 years old. Subu was crushed across the breast and the body had only a few other bruises. He was about 34 years old.

All four bodies were buried in one grave at the Brown cemetery, west of town, Sunday morning. About thirty foreigners, members of the same section gang with which the four dead men were employed, marched to the cemetery, taking part in a burial service they conducted. They had sent to Cleveland for a priest but he did not arrive. Friends of the dead men wanted photographs of the four caskets and themselves, which they intend sending to relatives in Europe, who have not yet learned of the accident. Two different views were taken at the cemetery by Photographer Beach.

Children need love, tenderness and sympathy as much as flowers need air and sunshine.

BASE BALL OR SOMETHING LIKE IT

Monday, August 9, the business men will meet at the ball park and "have it out." For some time the east siders have boasted of having laid their opponents of the opposite side on the shelf, and now they say they must put up or shut up. In other words the fellows on the west are "from Missouri" and must be "shown."

This will be great sport, as no professionals will be allowed to participate. The teams will not be limited to nine men each, but plenty of reserve timber will be on the ground and as soon as one is knocked out some one else will take his place. Come and see the battle and assist in caring for the wounded.

Hippensteel Resigns

Prof. Hippensteel has tendered his resignation as superintendent of the public schools of Auburn. He has acted in that capacity for over four years. Prof. A. J. Langston will probably be chosen by the board to fill the place of Mr. Hippensteel, while Willard Magiunis will take the principalship which is now held by Mr. Langston.

AFTER THE BLIND PIGS GARY MUST WEAR A LID

In accordance with the assertion that they would suppress all vice in Gary, the local police have taken up the crusade and raided two of the drug stores in the heart of the city.

The raid, which was conducted by Chief of Police Joseph Martin, came as a big surprise to Gary citizens, as it was thought that the police would confine their efforts to the "Patch" where a short time ago, more than fifty "blind pigs" were in operation. Chas. Herboltz, proprietor of the Gary Pharmacy at Broadway and Sixth Avenue, right in the heart of the business districts, and the Steel Pharmacy, Fifth avenue and Virginia streets, owned by J. Steel of Chicago, were the places raided. These are in the property of the Gary Land company, which was thought to be as dry as a tinder box, since the only two saloons in the first subdivision were closed by remonstrance last April.

While Herboltz has been under suspicion as conducting a "blind pig" not alone selling whiskey but beer, over his soda counter, it was thought that he was wise enough to obey the recent order of Martin. He, too, thooght that the police would not molest his place, but would confine their efforts to the foreign district.

As a result of Mayor Knott's clamping the lid on yesterday, Gary was very dry. Both Herboltz and Steele openly sold liquor to all those who desired it. This reached the ears of Chief Martin and he detailed two plain-clothes men to their places of business about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The two officers ordered whiskey and it was given them in a soda glass at the fountain. The same proceeding took place in Steel's pharmacy.

A short time afterward Chief Martin armed with search warrants invaded the place and found a large keg of whiskey and several cases of beer. The wet goods at Steele's consisted of three kegs of whisky and a quantity of wine. These were loaded into a wagon and taken to the police station, where they were destroyed. It is said the matter will be taken before the state board of pharmacy and the licenses of the places may be revoked.

Although it is still the talk of Gary that Mayor Knott will observe the state "blue laws" and put the lid on all day Sunday, yet the mayor failed to issue any such orders among the business men.

Off For the West

EDITOR HERALD:

Dear Sir—We left for our western trip on Monday, August 2, 1909, on Lake Shore train No. 23. We encountered several refreshing showers before we arrived at Chicago. The crops looked finer than I have ever seen them between Butler and Chicago at this time of the season.

Arriving on time we left at 10 p. m. on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. In the morning at 4 a. m., I woke up and found we were about to Sparta, Wis., (at which place some of our towns folks have lived) a few hours more and we are at LaCrosse, Minn. Here we cross over the Mississippi river to the west side of same and follow the bluff all along the St. Paul. On this smooth gliding stream we see river steamers and numerous house boats in which families spend the hot summer days. We are having a fine drizzling rain at present time. We are now passing fishing boats, some men on the shore dressing fine large catfish, others are heating clams and saucking them ready for marketing.

We are now seeing the most magnificent view up the Mississippi river which is straight for over three miles ahead, and we see the golden ripened grain in spots mingled with the green foliage which is on the opposite side of the river from us about one to two miles away. We are now entering St. Paul with sun shining bright.

Will stop writing for the present on account of mailing this so as to get article in this week's issue.

Yours Respectfully,
F. W. SWANTUSCH.

Thrilling From the Front But—

"My hardest part on our unfortunate summer tour," said the sailor, "was in a sea drammer, The Tar and the Cingalese. I played third mate. The wreck scene was certainly strenuous. Me and the crew swum the whole act through. The sea was a blue cloth what the supers shook in the wings and layin' on it we swum overhand. Every time our palms hit the water you could hear it all over the house.

"That fierce swimmin' in the wild seas was terrible hard work. Now and then your backbone would come down on the ocean and get all the skin rasped off. A wave would slide down your front and rip every button off your suit. The ship keeled over on a man one night and before he could lift her off himself his ankle bone was busted.

"A man in the wings made thunder and lightning with one hand and ate a cheese sandwich with the other. The brave ship rocked to and fro and it seemed that every minute would be her last. The dust from off the waves was stranglin'. If you glided too fast over the sea's surface you got splinters in you. Still we swam on.

"Sometimes, though, worn out, we'd swim behind the ship, stand up on the waves, stretch ourselves and rest. Then back we'd swim bravely again.

"When that terrible act was at last over, we'd go downstairs, remove the dust and splinters that we had contracted from our long swim, pack the ship in a trunk, fold up the ocean and go back to the boardin' house for supper."

Drug Store Goods That You want When You want them

The reason why we do so much business is as simple as one, two, three---the things most wanted are here when wanted.

Take for instance vacation wants---the myriad of things that were wanted in a hurry, all in a single week or two. You didn't need to wait until Geddes' Drug Store got them in, they were here when wanted.

And so on, we might go through the entire list of Drug Store Goods, and show how natural it is to have things wanted when wanted.

Confusion.

Lillian Braithwaite Hill, the noted writer of humorous advertisements, replied, at a banquet of haberdashers in St. Joseph, to an attack, by a business rival, on advertising humor.

"My friend," said Miss Hill, "says the public wants seriousness, not humor, in its 'ads.' But he contradicts himself horribly as he states his case. His facts seem to me as confused and absurd as the obituary of his wife's death that a Milwaukee man sent to a Milwaukee editor I know.

"This obituary said:

"'Mine wife Gretchen is dead. If she had lived till next Friday she'd been dead just two weeks yet. As a tree falls, so must it stand.'"

Mrs. Wischer went to the rescue of her child and in saving him was cut and bruised. All will recover.

Terrible Conflagration in Japan.

The terrible conflagration which has reduced to ashes a large portion of Osaka, Japan, is now under control. An area four miles square was swept by the flames. Osaka is one of three "imperial cities" of Japan, and as one of the most important manufacturing and commercial cities of the empire, it shelters almost three-quarters of a million people. The Buddhist temples for which the city is famous among travelers cover an enormous area. The chief public building is the palace, built of stone in 1583.

SPAIN IN AN UPROAR; ALFONSO IS HOOTED

Barcelona Revolutionary Movement Collapses and Leaders Face Trial.

MARTIAL LAW EVERYWHERE

Heights of Guruga, Morocco, Swarming with Moors, Attacked by Cruiser Neumancia.

Rioting in the provinces of Catalonia, Spain, and the general manifestations of discontent in Madrid over the continuance of the war against the Kabyle tribesmen in Morocco have given rise to grave fears that the entire country is on the brink of a revolution.

King Alfonso Wednesday declared all Spain under martial law and announced a temporary suspension of constitutional guarantees. He announced that the rioting in Catalonia would be put down at all costs and arranged to dispatch to Barcelona at once two cruisers and the entire Third and Fourth Army corps, under the personal command of Prince Charles of Bourbon. Prince Ferdinand of Bavaria also will accompany the troops, with the rank of squadron commander.

King Is Hooted in Streets.

King Alfonso was publicly hooted on the streets as he drove from the railroad station to the royal palace on his return from San Sebastian. Cries of "Down with the king!" were heard on every hand.

Barcelona is the center of the worst rioting, and it is there that the uprising against the war policy of the government seems to center. The authorities feel that their first care must be to break the spirit of the Barcelona rebels, after which they can subdue the malcontents in other places with greater ease.

Wednesday marked a black chapter in Spain's history, for there was tragedy both at home and abroad. The king reached Madrid in time to learn that part of his army at Melilla had had a bloody battle with the Moors, which, though the final victory was won by the Spaniards, cost the lives of twenty-one officers and a total of 200 Spaniards killed or wounded.

The captain-general of Barcelona, Spain, has telegraphed to the general staff at Madrid that the revolutionists have surrendered, and that he is now the master of the situation. The number of victims as a result of the fighting in the streets was high. Twenty-three buildings were destroyed by the artillery. Leaders of the rebels are being tried by court-martial and summarily executed. There is no train service between Barcelona and Madrid.

Special dispatches from Melilla said that the Spanish cruiser Numancia was shelling the heights of Mount Guruga, which was swarming with Moors. Gen. Marina, commander of the Spanish forces in Morocco, reports that there is momentary quiet outside Melilla, but no details of the situation of the army at Melilla are given out except that Spanish re-enforcements with a new commanding general have arrived there.

A Carlist plot to dethrone Alfonso is believed to have been foiled by the police, who raided the Carlist headquarters in Madrid and seized a large amount of papers and documents. Members of the Carlist junta, some of them close relatives of Don Jaime, the pretender, fled from Madrid just in time to escape capture. Bankers are rapidly shipping their cash reserves into France, under heavy military guard, owing to a fear that the army will revolt and a bloody revolution will follow.

CHECKS DEPORTING OF ALIENS.

Immigration Bureau Rebukes Inspectors for Hasty Action.

"Of late the arresting and deporting of aliens has increased enormously and a tendency is noted in some cases to sacrifice quality of work to quantity. This will not do. There must be no merely superficial inquiry in any cases. Officers must not submit recommendation for arrest upon irresponsible, uninvestigated accusations." This was the sharp rebuke administered in instructions which have just been sent out from Washington by the Bureau of Immigration to all commissioners of immigration and inspectors in charge, directing attention to the failure of investigating officers in making thorough preliminary inquiry, especially in cases of alleged violation of the alien contract labor law.

She was a widow, aged 55, and lived alone, and was last seen Friday. The coroner's deputies reported that she fell, accidentally, her neck being broken by striking a trunk, into which her body tumbled. She had been dead several days.

MADE IMMUNE FROM TYPHOID.

Soldiers Undergo Test and Prove the Value of New Serum.

The last of the series of typhoid tests have been applied to Sergeant Fuller and Privates Schmidt and Goodman, of Fort Omaha, and they have been pronounced immune. In June they were vaccinated with typhoid serum and developed the disease in a mild form. Later they were vaccinated, but the serum did not "take." Ten days ago they underwent the supreme test, that of drinking freely of a gallon of stagnant water into which one million fever germs had been placed. The men were placed in the hospital and closely watched. They should have developed symptoms within five to seven days, but as none has appeared they are now declared immune.

The Turkish court martial appointed by the new government to investigate the massacres in Adana Province reports that fifteen of the guilty Turks had already been hanged, that 800 more deserve death, that 15,000 deserve hard labor for life and that 80,000 deserve minor sentences. In view of the reported reconciliation of the opposing elements, it is recommended, however, that general amnesty be proclaimed, and that it be made the occasion of a national holiday.

TEN KILLED IN WRECK.

Trains of Spokane and Inland Line Collide at Coldwell, Wash.

Ten persons were killed and at least sixty were injured in a head-on collision of electric trains on the Spokane and Inland Railway Saturday afternoon. The wreck occurred at Coldwell, Wash., a station between Couer d'Alene, Idaho, and Spokane. No. 20 west-bound train had left Couer d'Alene at 4:30 p. m., and just reached Coldwell when it met No. 5, east bound. Both trains were going at the rate of about fifteen miles an hour. They crashed together without warning to the crew or passengers. The heavily laden coaches were crushed. Men ando women were thrown from their seats, some being hurled to the top of the coaches, while others were sent flying through the windows. Several coaches left the track, and passengers were caught under the pile of broken timbers. The Couer d'Alene hospital is now filled with the injured. Only one of the train crew is reported injured.

Fireworks Display Is Scene of Tragic Venture in an Ohio Town.

One man was killed and two were injured when a mortar exploded at a fireworks display in connection with the convention of the National Hay Dealers' Association at Cedar Point, near Sandusky, Ohio, Tuesday night. A part of the mortar struck Henry Jordan of Sandusky in the head, killing him instantly. Another piece of metal struck Thomas Larkin of Sandusky in the mouth, and flying sand probably destroyed the eyesight of Andrew Dietrich, of Reading, Ohio.

Herndon, a defenseless cripple, was killed with a hammer in his room in a down-town apartment and robbed. Brooks had been befriended by Herndon and was in his employ as an elevator boy. The negro confessed.

WOMAN GONE; FEAR FOUL PLAY.

Clothes Found on Pond Bank Indicate That Tragedy Occurred.

The finding of a woman's cape, stockings and petticoat on the bank of Truer's pond near by lends a sinister aspect to the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the young woman from a hotel in Burlington, N. J., last Thursday. The missing woman, together with a man supposed to be a New York broker, registered at the Metropolitan Inn Wednesday evening as Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins of New York. The man left on the early train for New York Thursday morning, and the woman, who seemed to be in trouble, hired a horse and carriage for a drive in the country. Later the team was found deserted on the bank of Rancocas creek. Letters in the woman's suitcase were addressed to "Miss A. M. Wilson, Manhattan Hotel, New York."

COTTON CROP WILL BE POOR.

The report made on the cotton condition up to July 25 by the National Ginners' Association gives the general average as 71.7. The report states: "This is the lowest condition ever known at this season of the year and indicates a crop of around 11,000,000 bales, and unless good rains fall in the next week throughout almost the entire belt, but more especially in Texas, southern and western Oklahoma and Mississippi, the crop will be under that figure."

Zigmund Klobber Bewails Loss of Diamond to Fair Highwayman.

The Chicago police are seeking a pretty, fashionably dressed young woman who early Tuesday morning robbed Zigmund Klobber of a diamond stud valued at $60. According to Klobber's story to the police he met the young woman in Lincoln Park. Her bewitching smile induced him to make overtures of friendship and he had no difficulty in engaging her in conversation. The girl, who was not more than nineteen years of age, says Klobber, suggested a walk, and the two strolled north in North Park avenue. At Tell place Klobber's companion stopped, and, turning quickly, snatched his diamond stud from his shirt. She ran north and disappeared into an alley.

Work of Congress

The Senate was not in session Tuesday. After a session of forty-nine minutes the House adjourned until Thursday, at which time it was expected that the much-talked-of resolution authorizing the tariff conferees to reduce the rates on leather and leather goods below those of the Payne bill will be brought in and acted upon. Some laughter was created by Mr. Clark, the minority leader, remarking that he was being "deviled to death" for information as to when the Democratic conferees were to be called in. "If you can tell me, I'll tell you," was the only consolation he got from Mr. Payne, the Ways and Means chairman. Mr. Tawney, of Minneapolis, aroused the House to a high pitch of excitement when he denounced Dr. Charles Richard Van Hise, president of the University of Wisconsin, for having, as Mr. Tawney said, made false charges against him regarding his attitude on the conservation of the national resources.

:—:

The Senate spent half an hour Thursday discussing the question whether a unanimous consent agreement of the Senate can be abrogated by a unanimous consent agreement. The point was raised by the presentation by Senator Bailey of a request for the cancellation of the agreement to transact no general legislation while the conference report on the tariff bill was pending, objection was made, and Mr. Bailey withdrew his proposition. During the discussion it appeared that one of the measures which it was desired to have taken up was an omnibus bridge bill, which was being pressed by Senator Frye. Senator Nelson asked whether, if Mr. Bailey's request should be granted, the bill known as the South Carolina dam bill would be included. Mr. Frye replied: "It is very important that that dam bill should be passed." The remark of the Senator from Maine came so unexpectedly that the Senate was convulsed with laughter. The Republicans showed up in the House in great numbers, having been notified to be present in anticipation of the reception of the conference report on the tariff. The report, however, was not forthcoming, and Mr. Mann (Ill.) promptly moved an adjournment. In stentorian tones the Democrats sent up a series of "Noes," but the Speaker in the midst of the din announced that the motion had been carried. The House accordingly adjourned.

:—:

When the Senate met Friday Senator Hale, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with amendments necessary to carry out certain provisions of the new tariff law. After five minutes' open session the Senate went into executive session, and a few minutes later adjourned until 12 o'clock. Entering upon the last stages of its consideration by Congress, the tariff bill as reported by the conferees was submitted to the House by Chairman Payne and ordered printed in the Congressional Record. Three hundred and fifty of the 390 members were in their seats when Chairman Payne passed up to the Speaker's desk the bulky document which has occupied the attention of Congress for four and half months.

Provision was made for the administration of the new tariff law by the adoption by the Senate Saturday of numerous amendments to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was passed. In addition to the salaries for judges and other officials and employes of the new United States Court of Customs Appeals the Senate appropriated $100,000 to aid the State Department in making treaties, $25,000 for the President's traveling expenses, $100,000 to pay the expenses of the advisory board which will assist the President in carrying out the duties imposed upon him by the maximum and minimum provision and $100,000 to defray the expenses of a bureau which will enforce the collection of the new corporation tax. The Senate voted to reduce the salaries of the judges of the new Customs Court to the amount received by Judges of United States Circuit Courts. Salaries of the government attorneys who will try customs cases also were reduced. The House adopted the conference report on the tariff bill, 195 to 183, twenty Republicans voting adversely. A motion to recommit the bill to conference was lost by a narrow margin. Opponents of the schedules claimed to have discovered several jokers relating to lumber and leather.

Lightning Paralyzed Woman.

At Huntington, W. Va., Mrs. Wilburn Wilson was struck by lightning and partially paralyzed during a severe storm. An infant she was nursing at the time was hurled from her arms to the floor, but was unhurt. The lightning struck a chimney and ran down into the room where the victim was sitting.

FROM FAR AND NEAR.

The four-story brick building in Pittsburg occupied by the Kirby Shoe Company burned. Loss, $75,000.

Fire that swept the business district of Orange, Va., caused $75,000 damage, only partially covered by insurance.

While bathing at Medicine Hat, Alberta, two employes of the Canadian Pacific Railway, John Ritchie and William Shaw, were drowned.

John D. Rockefeller has transferred several million dollars' worth of real estate in New York to his son, John D. Rockefeller, Jr. The transfers, it is understood, are a part of a plan of the oil magnate to lay aside the burdens of active business.

Entering the home of Charles J. Koester in Toledo, O., which he had so often visited as a friend, Earl Duncanson shot and slightly wounded Mrs. Koester, 28 years old, and shot himself through the head, dying instantly. Duncanson is supposed to have become suddenly insane.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Business conditions assume more strength and the final action upon tariff revision imparts buoyancy to various important branches. The latter is reflected by further accumulation of new demands and increasing use of money. The discount rate is firmly sustained at the recent advance. August payments of interest and dividends will involve heavy settlements at the banks, making a substantial drain upon funds, which are already notably drawn upon by the interior for crop-moving purposes.

Security markets are seen to be advancing, but the week records, for the first time in a long period, a simultaneous decline in values of primary breadstuffs and provisions.

Growing crops are exceptionally favored and larger movements appear in grain, factory outputs, general merchandise and mine and forest products. Official returns testify to heavy movements of commodities by the lakes and earnings of the Chicago steam roads show sustained gains.

All the mills at South Chicago, except one under repair, are running full, while preparations are made for larger use of equipment and labor in transportation. Contracts come forward freely in iron and steel, cars, power, structural materials, lumber and leather. Prices of the raw materials maintain firmness, although receipts to some extent run well over those of a year ago. The electric trades now obtain considerable forward work, thus encouraging free buying of supplies. Furniture-making shows steady recovery.

There is satisfactory absorption of tanned product for the shoe-shops, belting and novelties. Building operations remain steady, causing sustained demand for planing mill outputs and sanitary supplies. Retail trade here is benefited by the high temperatures, and many visiting buyers attend the wholesale markets.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 37 last week, 22 in 1908 and 30 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 10 last week, 5 in 1908 and 8 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

More buyers are in evidence in leading markets and fall jobbing trade shows signs of getting under headway, but the vacation season, the imminence of the tariff bill settlement and the rapidity of recent price advances breeds conservatism in many wholesale lines, pending clearer views of final crop outrun.

Industrial operations show enlargement, with iron and steel leading. There is a little more doing in the coal trade, but demand still lacks breadth, while coke is easier. There is a trifle less industrial unrest in evidence than a week ago. Car building concerns report large orders placed by railroads. There is more doing in the shoe trade east and west, but advices are that high prices of leather and hides tend to restrict trading in those lines.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 29, were 223, against 239 last week, 275 in the like week of 1908, 142 in 1907, 170 in 1906 and 178 in 1905.

Canadian failures for the week number thirty-four, as against twenty-four last week and thirty-two in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"Thank you," he said quietly; then, after a pause: "And now comes the main point of the thing. Would it suit you best if the ceremony came off to-morrow or the day after?"

This question was put in almost a casual fashion, but the question in his eyes was by no means casual.

"To-morrow? The next day?" she stammered, in utter bewinderment. "I never expected—why should there be such a hurry?"

Stewart had evidently anticipated this, and answered readily, keeping a strictly matter-of-fact manner.

"You see, every day that I knock about the hotel by myself adds to the chances of my coming across people and complicating matters; and it might be the same with you. We are only safe together now," he added, with a short laugh. She started up and paced the room in uncontrollable agitation.

"What could you think of me if I were to give up the whole affair now?" she asked, pausing before him, her head thrown back, her hands clasped behind her.

"I don't think you would go back on your word," he answered, looking quietly up at her.

If he had treated it as a possibility, she might even then have drawn back; but his calm certainly seemed to destroy all powers of resistance. After staring blankly at him for a moment, she went back to her seat.

A silence ensued—a silence broken by the advent of the maid with the tea things. Mechanically she handled them, giving Stewart his cup, and hearing him say cheerfully:

"This is like the last days on the St. Lawrence." He went on presently: "As soon as we have got things in proper order at Orkwell, we'll take a late honeymoon over to the Riviera, or some such frivolous place. I feel thoroughly inclined to take mine ease and enjoy life, and I am sure that you will be too, when once it is a 'fait accompli.' To-day is Tuesday—shall we agree to Thursday, then? I'll get the special license to-morrow. I suppose that church in Sloane street will be the most convenient for you—in the afternoon—would that suit you? And then you can get unpacked at the hotel before dinner, and we can go to the theater."

It was as in a dream that she listened. Then, all at once, the old recklessness came over her, and she laughed feverishly, almost wildly, as she said:

"Have it your own way, then. Only remember, it is all your own doing. Whatever happens, I am not to blame."

"I am not afraid," he answered.

The marriage was carried out according to Stewart's plans. The dreary December day was darkening under a ceaseless downpour of rain as they drove to the church, but, well warmed and lighted, the interior was not uncheerful. At least there was a cheerful center to it, where the light blazed brightly in the chancel, for a shadows hung darkly over the body of the church. In the most unemotional fashion they each pledged their faith, and the curate who married them forgot his own immature self-importance as he wondered of what romantic story this ceremony might be the outcome.

On the way back to her lodgings and during the long subsequent drive to the Metropole, Stewart carefully conversed in a cheery matter-of-fact fashion, and Mathilde did her best to follow his lead, but, try her utmost, she could not calm the tumultuous heart-beats as a servant led the way down one of the long hotel corridors to their rooms. It was a cheery little sitting-room that they were shown into, with a brightly blazing fire, and a teatable drawn up in front of it.

"Ah, this is pleasant!" she said, going up to the fire, and holding out her trembling hands to the heat.

If Stewart noticed her bewilderment, he gave no sign of doing so.

"You can bring tea," he said to the servant, who was leaving the room, "and tell them to bring up the luggage into that room," pointing to an open door; then, as the man left the room, he went on: "I think you will find that room comfortable. Mine is here," motioning to a door at the opposite end of the sitting-room. "I've been in possession here since I came. I told them that I was expecting my wife. Let me take your coat. Now, you had better have a comfortable rest by the fire. You must be tired after packing this morning. I'm going down to have a smoke and write some letters—the important one announcing our arrival, to my father, amongst them. By-the-by, shall I tell the people downstairs that you will see those maids the first thing in the morning?"

"Thanks," she answered vaguely, warming her hands at the fire. "But aren't you going to have tea?"

He smiled a bit sardonically. "Thanks, I think I'll have a soda downstairs. I'll order dinner at half-past seven. You don't mind dining down stairs, do you?"

"Oh, no!"

He smiled again at the eagerness of the answer, which implied that the last thing she desired was a tete-a-tete meal.

"Very well. And you are sure that you feel up to dressing and going to the theater?"

"Oh, yes. It will be rather amusing to find oneself decently dressed and in a cheerful place again."

He looked pleased at her response. "That's right. I'll get tickets for the most frivolous thing I can find. Au revoir."

It was over; there was no drawing back now. But all the same there was an infinite sense of relief, for within the last hour Stewart had shown her by every word and sign how scrupulously he intended to adhere to his side of the bargain.

He had never made a movement to hold her hand; he would not even loiter over tea by the fire with her. But perhaps the temptation had been wanting. Perhaps he felt no desire for more, to say the least of it, friendly relations between them. And yet how thoughtful he had been in every trifle which concerned her comfort and convenience.

CHAPTER VIII.

While busy in her room, Mathilde was interrupted by a knock at the door, and the delivery of a large box addressed to "Mrs. Stewart."

She was on the point of saying that there must be some mistake, when, with a start, she remembered.

With an uncomfortable anticipation, she opened the parcel, and, alone as she was a vivid flush dyed her face as she lifted out a long cloak of brocaded velvet, varying in tint from pearly white to deepest dove-color. It was edged with soft, gray ostrich feathers, and lined with white fur. "In exchange for a soul," she muttered to herself, and then, as though ashamed of the bitterness of the thought, she forced herself to acknowledge the well-timed thoughtfulness of the gift.

It was in words of gentle dignity that she thanked Stewart for his gift as she stood by the sitting-room fire, dressed for the evening.

He stood beside her, looking down. The crisp waves of her tawny hair were drawn back from her low, square forehead, and brightened by the contrast of a black aigrette.

Her low-cut black bodice showed the white curves of her neck, encircled by a string of pearls. The soft shimmer of the gray velvet cloak, which hung open from her shoulders, acted as a frame to the splendid coloring of face and hair.

"I was right," he said lightly. "As soon as I saw that thing in a Bond street window, I knew that it would make you look like a Venetian Dogaressa.'

"But surely Dogaressas must have been like Lady Mayoresses, 'fair, fat and forty,'" she jested, though her smile told that she liked the words.

"This is rather different from our Christmas dinner," Stewart said, cheerfully, as they took their seat at a small table in the dining-room, that, with its red-shaded lights and groups of well-dressed people, had so festive an air to those fresh from the dark discomfort of winter seas.

They were at no lack for the casual careless talk of those who have been thrown together in the intimacy of daily life.

"Bye-the-bye," he said, as they loitered over their coffee, "you never told me how you had disposed of your victim, poor Hudson. Where did you part from him?"

"At Euston," she laughed. "He was rather woe-begone.'

"The poor boy was dreadfully struck," and his eyes, as they rested on her, seemed to add that it was natural enough. "And he was shaken off without any address, or such?" he asked, lighting his cigarette.

"Oh, I told him that I was going to Paris at once, and would write from there, or something of that kind. I hardly remember what," she answered, carelessly, beginning to pull on her long, pearl-colored gloves.

"A conspirator requires a good memory. "You'll need to remember every word you say to Mrs. Herbert," he said, warningly.

She shivered. "It gives me a chill to hear her name! You have never described her to me, though."

He thought for a moment. "There is nothing very definite about her to describe. She is one of those bleached looking women, with a high, bony nose, and pale eyes."

"But what style is she? 'Grande dame' or country squiress? Well-dressed or dowdy? One can always stand better to one's guns with a dowdy woman."

"She's certainly not an out-door person, though she's great on local influences, and societies and such—her piety is her strongest point, I think. I suppose she is well-dressed in a way, though there is nothing smart about her. I should say that the prevailing aspect was skimpiness. There is always a look as though something were too narrow, or too short, or too something."

"How graphic!" she commented. Then, pursuing her inquiries, "Do you suppose that she will pretend to be friendly at first?"

"Goodness knows! You may be sure that whatever she does it will be with one object of keeping her influence over my father, and preventing me from acquiring any. Never forget that."

"I shall not forget it," she said, and the confident smile of warfare lit her face.

He watched her curiously.

"It will be a Homeric combat, if it ever comes to an open battle between you two. But we must be going."

The play that they watched that evening had no tragic figure of the woman with a past, dropping her arms and staring out into vacancy. Stewart had taken good care of that. It was one of those flippant comedies of society life, acted by ladies and gentlemen in the smartest of modern attire.

The wit, the fashions, the audience were all a welcome amusement, and it was with the sensations that mark the end of a successful evening that they returned to the hotel.

All the same Mathilde felt her spirits flag as they went towards the lift, for the old nervousness was returning with the prospect of a tete-a-tete in that little sitting-room upstairs. She had rejected the proposal of supper, and they were waiting amongst a little group of returned theater-goers like themselves, for the descent of the lift. It did not need the murmur from Stewart, "How tired you look!" to make Mathilde aware that she had grown pale and chill.

"I shall not come upstairs yet," Stewart said. "I must have a smoke before I turn in. I dare say that you would like to breakfast in your own room in the morning. Perhaps you will be ready to see me about ten. Good-night!" for the lift was there, and people were already crowding into it.

All Mathilde's wanness was lost in a lovely flush of color, brought by a sense of relief.

"Good-night!" she responded, with a smile that was almost shy, but Stewart's gravity was somewhat grim.

He had easily read the meaning of both pallor and flush, and perhaps he did not appreciate the implied doubt in his good faith.

There are mild, sunshiny mornings even in a London winter. Such a one came on the following day, and Mathilde dressed herself early to profit by it. What woman, freshly landed in England, and with money in her purse, could resist the temptation of a morning's London shopping?

She had been up early, having much to attend to this morning. First there had been a letter to her eldest brother telling him in a somewhat curt fashion that on the voyage over, she had met and become engaged to Mr. James Stewart, heir to Sir James Stewart, of Orkwell, and had yesterday been married to him, by special license, at the Church of Holy Trinity, Sloane street.

This bare statement of facts being completed, she added a few conventional messages of family amiability, and giving her address, signed herself by her new name, "Mathilde Stewart." She paused a moment to consider the effect.

"There is something incongruous in it," she murmured to herself. "There is a great gulf somehow between the 'Mathilde' and the 'Stewart.' Which will get the upper hand—the old Mathilde or the new Stewart?"

But she had little time for such meditation, for shortly the applicants for the maid's place appeared.

There were three or four—Swiss, French and English, and all apparently suitable enough.

But Mathilde did not hesitate long, for it is astonishing how soon a minor question is settled by one whose mind is filled with weightier problems.

She chose one, a sallow little Frenchwoman, with a tired face and kind eyes. It was the dog-like look in these eyes that decided her, for she felt that the woman would be faithful. Just as this interview was closing, Stewart made his appearance with a brisk morning greeting.

"So this is your new maid? I hope that she can come to you this evening, for I rather think, if you can manage it, that we ought to go down to Orkwell to-morrow morning."

"So soon?" she said, startled. "Oh, yes, I can manage it. You said that you could come to-day?" to the maid, in French.

"Perfaitement, Madame."

"Speak in English," Stewart said.

The woman looked puzzled,

"But Madame said that she would converse with me in French, which she speaks like a vraine Parisienne."

"But I want to hear your English," he insisted.

"Oh, I do beg million pardons, sir. I know I do speak bad, but bad! But Madame was so kind." She was evidently in fears for her place, but Stewart reassured her with a nod.

"That's all right. Then she'll come to-night," with a look at Mathilde, who dismissed the woman kindly.

Mathilde was seated in a big arm-chair pulling on her gloves. The room was bright with sunshine and fragrant with roses and mignonette.

"How cozy it seems here!" he said, looking round appreciatively. "Are you in a great hurry to go out, or may I chat a bit?"

"Oh, there's no hurry," she agreed placidly. She no longer felt nervous with him, and had a sense of compunction for her qualms of the day before.

"That's right," and he settled himself with an air of satisfaction in the arm-chair opposite.

"I've had a wire from Orkwell just now, which must have been sent off on getting my letter," he began.

"Your father wishes you to come at once. Welcome home.—Flora."

"That effusion, counting the address, must have cost the dear soul a shilling. Now, what do you think of wiring that we will go down to-morrow?"

He watched her closely, but if he expected to see any signs of shrinking from the crisis, he was mistaken.

NOTABLE ENGINEERING FEAT.

Norway's New Railway Is One of Which It May Be Proud.

The new railway which crosses the great mountain chain of South Norway, linking Bergen with Christiania and the rest of Europe, is an achievement of which Norwegian engineers have every reason to be proud. Not that it is the highest mountain line in Europe. There are three tunnels in Switzerland all higher than the highest part of the Bergen railway, but the difficulties to be surmounted in Norway were infinitely greater than those in Switzerland, by reason of the latitude of the district to be traversed.

The Norwegian line is between the 60th and 61st degrees of north latitude, with the snow line a little below 5,000 feet, and, in carrying the track through the magnificent Hallingsdal, an uninhabited and uninhabitable region had to be crossed.

Finse is the highest point reached by the line, and for some distance, although the view is constantly intercepted by tunnels, there are openings amongst the snowy mountain tops with their livid glaciers, through which some of the finest valleys in Norway are momentarily visible. For five years a gang of 1,100 men has been working night and day on this part of the line. These men are housed in small wooden cabins dotted about amongst the rocks, and the material for them and for the station house at Finse had to be carried up on the backs of men and horses from Flaam, 4,500 feet below. Elsewhere, station houses and hotels are built of wood. Finse stands in so exposed a position that its station walls, inner and outer, are of stone, over three feet thick. For eight months of the year Finse is snowed up and inaccessible. The plateau is swept by storms of such violence that the snow is piled in huge drifts, with which the snow plows are wholly unable to cope, and before October the greater part of this section of the line will, for this reason, have to be covered in.

The snow plows in use on the Bergen line are made in Christiania and are of 900 horse power, driven by locomotives of 700 horse power, but cannot be employed if the snow is more than three yards deep. To regulate the drifting snow, therefore, an ingenious system of movable wooden screens will be in operation during the coming winter, but by October 14 the little station houses and hotels will all have laid in supplies of every kind sufficient for eight months' consumption, and thus be independent of the train service.

Even amongst the ice and snow of places like Gjello and Finse, cups of hot soup, or hot coffee, with sandwiches of Norwegian pattern made of excellent bread, butter and cheese, may be had at very low prices. Each famished passenger seizes what he can reach, helps himself with a ladle from the bowl of cream near the door, and eats and drinks on the graveled patch outside the station house.

"A Feather in One's Cap."

Our expression, "A Feather in One's Cap," originated in Hungary in 1599. At that time it was an ancient custom among the Hungarians that no one was permitted to wear a feather in his hat unless he had killed a Turk. It was a law that for each slain Turk, the slayer should be allowed to wear one feather.

The Emperor of Japan has thirty residences scattered throughout his domain.

A DEPARTMENT FOR WOMEN

Girls Who Look for Flaws.

There are some people who like to consider themselves "critical" and "discriminating." They pride themselves on "seeing through" people, on hitting on their bad points straight away, on not being deceived by the superficial qualities. They proclaim that they have unusual powers of character reading and are rarely mistaken in their judgments.

Well, it is a great gift to be able to size people up accurately. It saves one a great deal of disillusionment and disappointment. But the woman who goes about deliberately looking for flaws in other people's characters is spoiling her own nature, and laying up no end of unhappiness for herself. One cannot think continually of the faults and failings and unpleasant qualities of others without developing a disagreeable nature. However hidden it may be under a cultivated and tactful manner, that unhappy view of life will show itself and freeze everything around.

A beautiful and gifted girl, who might be made welcome wherever she goes, can make herself disliked by all her friends by a habit of tearing every fellow being who ventures into her presence to tatters with her criticism. She does not grasp the fact that she is deprived of much happiness which her friends enjoy, and she would laugh with derision if she were told that it is better a thousand times to be deceived and disillusioned again and again and to keep one's faith in human nature, than to become so critical and suspicious that one can see nothing but harm in the best of people. But it is so, and if you reflect a little you can't help realizing it.

The critical woman does not make the best wife either. Men do not want women of that kind as companions. Whether a man is in business or however he is occupied, he is more or less dependent upon his fellows for his happiness and enjoyment. But men as a class are disposed to be critical themselves. They are apt to lose their ideals and their optimism as they go through life. They need the tonic of a joyous and hopeful woman to balance the depressing tendency of their own minds. Men are like children in the dark and they want a soothing, mothering voice to say now and then: "It's all right; there's nothing to be afraid of."

It is much more pleasant to look for honeysuckle than for thistles, better to hunt for buttercups than nettles. It is a fact that in this world we find the things which we persistently seek for. So keep looking for the best in other people and you will develop the best and happiest side of yourself.

Home, Sweet Home.

Home is where we express our worst and best selves.

Home is where the heart finds its greatest content.

Home is the result of learning to bear and forbear.

Home is the best school for making true men and women.

Home is God's blessing to mankind, the safeguard of the world.

Home is where love rules, unselfishness, tact and harmony exist.

Home is the dearest earthly shelter from the cradle to the grave.

Home is an inn where love is landlord and contentment chief guest.

Home is a corporation whose preferred stock is contented children.

Home is where happiness, health, harmony, heart's ease, holiness, heritage, heaven dwell.

Home is where the wife is neat and clean and the husband sober and industrious, children respectful.

Home is a comfortable and necessary retreat and shelter for us in advanced age, and if we do not plant it while young it will give us no shade when we grow old.—Lord Chesterfield.

When baby is small the milk in his bottle is apt to get quite cold before he has finished, and the result is often a stomachache. A very good plan to follow to prevent this happening is to place an india-rubber hot-water bottle, nearly full of moderately hot water, under the feeding bottle. In this way the food will retain the heat until baby has finished his meal, and a great deal of trouble and anxiety to nurse and mother will be saved.

Never talk secrets before a child. Children hear a great deal more of the grownups' conversation than their parents give them credit for, and it places the older people in a very awkward position if a child quite innocently repeats a conversation he has heard which was not meant for a third person's ears at all. In such a case a mother has no right to scold, as it is entirely her own fault for speaking before the child.

Cutting baby's nails is often a very trying operation, as most little ones when they see the scissors advancing very naturally think that they are going to be hurt. The correct way to cut nails is straight across; if the corners are cut off the nails have a tendency to grow inward, and a bad toe or finger may result.

The Pesky Fly.

The pesky fly now makes you swear by crawling, crawling everywhere. He wipes his feet upon the bread and creeps about your hairless head. Within the milk he takes a bath, and in the butter makes a path, and then he angers Mary Jane by specking up the window pane, and mamma yells and baby squirms because he leaves those awful germs. Get out the sticky paper, quick, and make him goshamighty sick!—Los Angeles Express.

The Old-Fashioned Bonnet.

How dear to my heart is the old-fashioned bonnet,
The old-fashioned bonnet that Nell used to wear;
Without any plums and red cherries stuck on it—
The bonnet that didn't require phony hair.

The dishpan effect may be stylish and stunning,
The waste-paper basket that's lately come in
May be quite the rage and recherche and cunning,
But give me the hat she tied under her chin.
—Detroit Free Press.

How to Plant Roses.

Invariably roses should be planted by themselves, for they thrive poorly unless allowed to absorb the entire nourishment of a rich soil. Indeed, many growers believe certain varieties do best when living apart from even those nearest of kin and make up their rosariums with many beds, each holding one kind of rose, or set the plants in rows with ample room left between for cultivation. June, however, is not the time to plan or build a rosarium, which can be done successfully only in the spring or autumn.—The Delineator.

Ideal Wash Cloth.

Some housekeepers think old flour sacks make ideal wash cloths for dishes. The chief objection is the lettering. These can be removed by soaking the sacks in warm borax water over night. In the morning wring out, put in cold water to which has been added enough borax and a little soap to make a strong suds, and boil for half an hour.

Modish Black and White Hat.

Black and white is a favorite combination for summer millinery. Our cut illustrates a striking hat in black chip, whose high crown is almost covered with a wide band of jet trimming. The only other decoration is a gorgeous white aigrette fastened directly in center of back with a huge jet cabachon.

Turning the Other Cheek.

Some very honorable individuals feel that it is necessary to make a great show of indignation if somebody accidentally steps upon their toes. But fine, broad-minded people say: "Never touched me," and let it go at that. If you look for fights you will surely find more than you are looking for, because a lot of them will be looking for you. To take life calmly and with a smile is the better way. We're seldom insulted as deeply as we fancy, and even if we are why make retort. Move out of the way, so you won't be in the road when the next one comes along.

STUNNING AFTERNOON COSTUME.

One of the most stunning costumes recently seen was of Paris construction, as the combination of colors will prove, and a worthy example of the art of the modistes of the French capital. As shown by the sketch, it is a one-piece dress of mode chiffon voile, with tunic opening on left side. The square yoke and stock are tucked white chiffon, the former outlined with bands of jet trimming and the girdle of water-green satin fastened in front in a large bow, and runs to waist line at back, falling from there in long ends and loops. The Neapolitan hat, dyed to match the material, is faced with self-tone silk and trimmed on top with two pinkish-red roses and a spreading bunch of mauve uncurled ostrich feathers.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Usually when the suit is of a decided color a hat of some soft, vague tint is worn.

Except for an occasional scent flounce, all trimming is put on in lengthwise form.

Figured as well as striped henriettas are seen in the shops in all the newest colorings.

The picturesque Charlotte Corday fichu is appearing on some of the sheer muslin gowns.

Unusual, to say the least, is a wreath of prickly green burrs around the crown of a straw hat.

Serge is a good, practical material for all-around wear. It wears well and has a decided style of its own.

Pear-shaped pearls or jewels, or strands of platinum threaded with diamonds and pearls, are fashionable.

Colored net or tulle sleeves have a lining of gold net. This gives just a charming shimmer through the outer mesh.

White violets are to be more popular than the Russian and Parma violets, which have held undisputed sway.

Glace kid gloves are imperative for full dress, except in very hot weather, and may be worn with almost any costume.

Pennants most elaborate in workmanship have as their chief ornament a tiny watch, not larger than a 10-cent piece.

Spanish lace scarfs, scarcely seen since the days of their popularity, twenty years ago, have again made an appearance.

A great many odd shoulder bands and straps are being introduced, particularly as a finish for jumper gowns worn over guimpes.

To Mend Kid Gloves.

Wherever a break appears in kid gloves place the edges as closely together as possible and apply court plaster on the wrong side, pressing it firmly to the kid. This gives a much better appearance than stitches, and, if properly done, will last as long as the gloves.

To Clean Globes.

When the globes from a chandelier have become dirty from smoke, they should be soaked in warm soda water about twenty minutes. Then add a few drops of ammonia and wash the globes well with a soaped flannel, rinse in clean cold water, dry with a soft linen cloth.

For Drooping Plants.

If your plants seem inclined to decay, try sticking half a dozen matches in the earth around them, heads down. The sulphur in them will kill the worms that probably are eating away the roots.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Mrs. George Sweigert committed suicide at Middletown because her twins died.

Free delivery of mail will be instituted at Winona Lake, beginning August 16.

Mrs. Lewis Cooper died in Darlington from the effects of a fall she received a year ago. She was 76 years old.

George W. Larimore fell against a circular block saw at the Indianapolis Handle Company's plant and had both hands cut off at the wrist.

Joseph Harnes, of near Rushville, was severely bitten by his dog while trying to release the animal from a wire fence in which it was caught.

George French, aged 28, arrested for stealing a horse, was taken ill in jail at Valparaiso with appendicitis and died at the hospital shortly afterward. His home was at Dexter, Mich.

Albert C. Smiley, a hay and grain merchant at Lawrenceburg, accidentally tripped and fell over a large black cat in his warehouse. He suffered a broken arm and a badly bruised face.

Thomas Lanahan, a farmer near Marietta, fell dead while climbing a strawstack. He was in good health when he arose from bed. Heart trouble was the cause. He was 67 years old.

Leaving a note to his wife that he was going away and that she would never find him, Harry C. Mains, a traveling salesman, disappeared from Fort Wayne. He had previously resigned his position.

Since May there have been 250 cases of measles reported in Logansport. The last quarantine sign was taken down a few days ago and now the first time since May 1 there is not a case of contagious disease in the city.

Peter Horn, of Ligonier, caught a minnow hook in his eye while fishing at Waldron Lake. The suffering man was taken first to Wawaka, then to Ligonier and finally to Elkhart before a surgeon was found who gave him relief.

Louis Kell, of Princeton, found a freak hen egg in his chicken yard a few days ago. It was about the size of a goose egg, and when broken it contained the usual amount of yolk and white together, with another well-formed egg of average size.

John Arnold, living two miles north of St. Paul, has a cow minus a tail. She was switching flies and got her tail caught between a barbed wire fence and a fence post. She gave a jerk to tear the tail loose from the fence, and instead tore it loose from her body.

A Young Men's Industrial Association is being organized for the purpose of boosting Rushville. The movement has been set in motion by three of the city's prominent young business men and is being pushed with enthusiasm and energy. Its success now seems assured.

Norman Byrns, the engineer who was killed in the wreck of the Monon passenger train at Crawfordsville last week, was strapped in his cab with a heavy leather belt, which he wore during all his runs. This was used on account of curves and grades and aided him in reversing his engine.

James Southwood, a well-known farmer and stock raiser near Boonville, had an unusual experience with a sick horse. The horse acted as if choked, and when several remedies were applied without avail, Dr. Cook put an instrument down its neck and extracted a coiled piece of baling wire. It is supposed the horse accidentally swallowed the wire while eating baled hay.

Otis Chapman, 12-year-old son of Jerry Chapman, of Bloomington, suffered a broken leg and received other serious injuries when his foot caught in a buggy wheel. The boy stepped on the wheel, his foot slipped, caught in the wheel, and as the horse moved forward the boy was thrown over and over with each revolution of the wheel. At first it was feared the wounded leg would have to be amputated, but now it is thought amputation will not be necessary.

Leonard B. Clore, of Franklin, who represented Johnson County in the recent session of the Legislature, has been notified of his selection as superintendent of judges for the 1910 annual corn exposition to be held in Omaha, Neb. A recent announcement from the directors of the National Corn Exposition barred Mr. Clore from entering any corn in any class. Mr. Clore won the $1,000 trophy and $1,000 in gold last December on his entry of Johnson County white Dent corn, and on a single ear he carried off the first prize, which was an automobile. Mr. Clore has decided that he will not go to Russia to conduct a three years' school of instruction in the raising of corn.

Henry Hoar, said to be the only United States pensioner that never was a soldier or in any way connected with the army, died recently at Salem from a bullet wound received in the John Morgan raid, July 10, 1863.

Mrs. Fred Finley, of Bloomington, was bitten by a dog thought to be mad. It jumped at her face and bit her nose. The injury is severe aside from the danger of rabies. The dog was killed and its brain is being examined.

Joe Palmer, a young man near Decatur, some months ago wrote to Miss Daisy Talbott, of Bedford, whose name he found written on an egg purchased at a Decatur store. Acquaintance followed and now the young people will marry.

On the farm of Alvin Brailey, eight miles southwest of Bloomfield, near Newberry, a large wildcat was killed by Phenis Cade and his bull terrier. This is the first wildcat killed in Greene County in many years. It is possible the animal is the one that escaped from Brazil a month ago.

By the splashing of molten metal in a steel mill at Anderson, the hands and arms of James Shottner, 38 years old, were literally cooked, and there is some doubt as to whether Shottner will recover the use of his fingers.

In Huntington County the wedding of Mrs. Sarah Mygrants and Levi W. Pownall was solemnized with Rev. Eby, of Goblesville, officiating. Mr. Pownall has been married three times previously and Mrs. Pownall has been married twice. The multiplicity of marriages causes a funny mixture in relationship, making Mrs. Pownall grandmother to her daughter-in-law and mother to her son's mother-in-law.

"The fires in your head are crossed," remarked pretty Vera Fowler to her husband, Cary, to whom she had been married less than a month, according to a complaint for divorce filed in the Superior Court at Muncie by the aggrieved husband. He also avers that he and his wife were incompatible. The court must decide whether the remark of a wife that her husband's wires are crossed constitutes cruel and inhuman treatment within the statutory meaning.

The people whose dead are buried in many country graveyards south of Terre Haute, in Vigo and Sullivan Counties, are horrified by the discovery that ground hogs have been ghouls. The animals have burrowed into many graves and bones of the dead were found strewn on the surface. These bones have been reburied and the people are trying to stop the molestation. In some cases water has been poured into the holes. In others wood fires were started at the mouth of the openings with sulphur thrown in and a lid securely placed to confine the fumes to the interior as much as possible.

"Dutch" Lyons, of Brook, a well known grain dealer, is in a critical condition as a result of an automobile wreck north of Morocco. Mr. Lyons was thrown from the machine while it was running at a high rate of speed.

The threshing machine of Frank Roe was totally destroyed by fire on the Zimmerman farm three miles south east of Ligonier, just after the men had finished threshing. It is thought the fire caught from a hot box or a match. No other damage was done.

Mrs. Charles B. Fagan, of St. Paul was badly burned in a gasoline explosion. After pouring some gasoline in to a pan she struck a match. There was a flash and Mrs. Fagan ran screaming with her clothing in flames. The flesh on her arms was cooked.

Robert V. Braxtan, a well-known stock man and farmer, was killed last week at Paoli when his horse ran away. The animal became frightened and dashed into a tree, throwing him headlong on the stone pavement and rendering him unconscious. He died two hours later.

How Democratic Senators Voted

IN the senate the other day Senator Culberson, of Texas, made a statement intended to clear away any misunderstanding as to the attitude of Democrats with respect to the tariff bill. At the close of each session, for many years, Mr. Culberson has prepared and put on record the democratic version of what had been done. These statements have been used as party documents. Speaking on the subject of democratic division on the tariff, Mr. Culberson in his latest statement had this to say:

"An impression seems to have been created in some quarters that in their action on the tariff bill the democrats of the senate have been commonly and seriously divided among themselves, and have often voted with the protectionist majority. With the exception of the vote on iron ore, coal, lumber and hides, the democratic vote was practically a unit, and on hides it was a unit when coupled with the proposition that leather, boots and shoes should also be placed on the free list. On the income tax amendment to the bill the democratic vote was unanimous, and on oil, tea and coffee, print paper and wood pulp it was substantially so. Still more significant and important, on all subjects of the bill which particularly and more directly affect the consuming masses and the cost of living, such as crockery, cutlery, glassware, sugar, household goods generally, agricultural implements, blankets, flannels and hats, leather, boots and shoes, iron and steel and their products, including cotton ties, cotton manufactures, wool and manufactures of wool—in fact, on all articles affected by the tariff which enter into the daily needs of the people, the democratic vote was in effect unanimous, and was for much lower duties than those which were adopted. It was upon democratic initiative, moreover, that sulphate of ammonia, paris green and london purple and cotton bagging were placed on the free list in the senate bill, which are the principal benefits to the farmers and fruit growers in the bill, and it was also due to democratic initiative that the tax on tea and coffee was stricken from the maximum provision of the senate measure."

Must Show the Governor

GOVERNOR MARSHALL will attempt, in the September session of the Marion county courts, to collect approximately $40,000, which would be due the state from the Adams, Wells-Fargo and American Express companies if an act passed in 1901 were enforced providing that all express companies operating in the state shall pay into the state treasury a tax, independent of all other taxes, of one-tenth of 1 per cent of the total capitalization of the companies. If the governor is able to collect the tax, the companies will be required to pay as follows: Adams, $12,000; Wells-Fargo, $8,000; American (including the United States properties and business), $20,000.

The companies have in the past refused to pay the tax on the ground that the act is unconstitutional. The general law concerning special taxes against foreign corporations operating in the state is that they are required to pay one-tenth of 1 per cent of such capital stock as is represented in the business in Indiana. An exception was made in the cases of the express companies, and the latter, claiming discrimination, held that the law is unconstitutional. It appears that attorneys general since the law was enacted have advised the succeeding secretaries of state that the law was unconstitutional and the tax uncollectible, although the present secretary, Fred A. Sims, has not considered the matter further than to consult with the governor when the latter called him into consultation.

The governor has turned the question over to Prosecuting Attorney Hooton, of Marion county, who will bring action in September.

"I am not holding that the collection can be made," said the governor, "but the law is on the books. It is either good or bad. If it is good, the state wants the money; if it is bad, then we want to know it so the legislature may enact a good law to the end aimed at in this."—Indianapolis News

The School Book Question

BY virtue of his office, Governor Marshall is a member of the state board of education. The members of that board, in their capacity of school book commissioners, have finally settled the question as to what books are to be used in the public schools during the next year. And the question has been settled in favor of the people and against the school book combine. That this is so is due almost wholly to Governor Marshall's determined stand against unnecessary changes in text-books. The book trust, through the crafty manipulation of its agents, had framed up a scheme to throw out all of the books now in use and for which it was necessary to make new contracts. If this scheme had succeeded the people having children in the schools would have been fleeced out of an enormous sum of money. The readers were changed because it was conceded that the old ones were no longer fit. But no other changes were made, thanks to Governor Marshall and State Superintendent Aley. These officials were mindful of the people's interests. The result is that hundreds of thousands of dollars will remain in the pockets of the fathers and mothers of the state which would have gone to further enrich the school book trust if its grab had succeeded.

Revenue Or Graft?

WITH a big majority in both branches of congress, the republicans have made a tariff law that is a disgrace to the country and an injury to at least 90 per cent of the people. The result is that many clear-headed men see that there is going to be a popular revolt which will manifest itself in repuplican defeat at the next election. In this emergency they are raising up the cry that "the tariff must be taken out of politics." But it will not be taken out of politics so long as all of the people are heavily taxed for the benefit of a few who don't need the money except to maintain expensive establishments abroad and more than royal palaces at home. A tariff for public revenue and not a tariff for private graft must be put in operation before the question can be taken out of politics.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Wyrick, of Angola, and the Hudson bank.

Here's success to you, Brother Powers.—Fayette (O.) Review.

J. F. Coss of the Ashley Times complains about the support the home merchants are giving him. He has only two fifty cent ads in his paper, and every newspaper man knows that a paper cannot exist on such patronage. Coss has recently gone to the expense of installing a typesetting machine, and although there isn't much friendship existing between Mr. Coss and the writer, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the business men are making a mistake.

Peter Gonser, another of DeKalb county's old and respected citizens, passed away on last Saturday at the age of sixty-eight years. Death came after considerable suffering, the disease being in the nature of dropsy. He has resided in the county from the time he was ten years old. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in the 29th Infantry and served in the war of the Rebellion. He is survived by the widow and four sons, William, Harry, James and Joseph Gonser, all of whom reside near Corunna.

Joe Beckner, one of the well-known residents of DeKalb county, was stricken with heart disease on Friday afternoon while in a boat on Cedar lake and died soon afterward. He was fishing on the lake with Messrs. McIntosh and Schreber. His age was sixty-five years and he is survived by his daughter, Miss Cora Beckner. Mr. Beckner was in the boat alone. The two others, several rods away in another boat, noticed his peculiar actions and going to him saw that he slipped from his seat to the bottom of the boat and was breathing his last. They raised him up, but in a few moments he died.

Two Irishmen were about to run a race to a certain tree by different routes. Suddenly Mike slapped Pat on the back and asked him how they were to tell who reached the destination first. After a moment's thought Pat answered: "I tell yez, Mike. If I get there first I'll make a mark on that tree with this chalk; and if you get there first you can rub it out."

The HERALD editor hopes to see a good council elected this fall regardless of politics. The kind of men that should be elected are those who will work for the best interests of the city and keep up the movement for improvements. If the citizens themselves do not show their confidence in the city, how can we expect to instill confidence in strangers and induce them to locate here? By making improvements does not necessarily mean that we should be extravagant and exceed the necessities. Both tickets should be made up of the best timber available and then no mistake can be made. Therefore every voter should attend the caucuses and help to select the men they are to vote for at the election. It is not too soon now to begin to think about the men who are to represent us for the next four years. Every citizen should take a personal interest in the matter and do their best for a greater Butler.

The elevation of the socialists to the management of the government of France will be watched with great interest by those who are in sympathy with that doctrine. Not only by socialist sympathizers, but by all others who are interested in the question of government. The new premier, M. Aristice Briand, promises to end the awful war with labor that has been going in the French country for some time. The nearest approach to a socialistic government in the world is in New Zealand and the results are so good that the wonder is that all other civilized countries do not follow the example of that country. In New Zealand labor gets what belongs to it. The men that produce have a share in the products and also have a share in the management of the government. Special privilege in that country is a thing of the past and it may truly be said to be a country without paupers or millionaires. Whether or not France will follow the example of the island country by the elevation of socialists to the management of the government is not yet known, but everything will watch closely the action of the French cabinet.—Fayette (O.) Review.

The Auburn Stork Auto, which is owned and operated by Dr. U. G. Souder, was kept pretty busy early Monday morning. First it was called to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Derrow, five miles east of Auburn, where Dr. Souder presented Mr. Derrow with a pretty faced baby daughter. While there a telephone message called him to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Donley, in Auburn, to greet the arrival of a bouncing boy. A peculiarity in connection with the two births so near together in regard to time is that Mrs. Donley and Mr. Derrow are brother and sister.—Courier.

One of Butler's young men who does not seem to associate with the "fair sex" of this city, when asked what he thought of our girls made this statement: "The most peculiar thing about girls is their peculiarness: They were born that way. They are so dignified they don't have any fun in this life and so timid they can't fight. Consequently they are considerably out of place. They also giggle at everything and nothing. Take away the average girl's giggle and her chewing gum and wait until her hat blows off and there is not enough left worth mentioning. When they are little they play with dolls, and when they grow up they play with men. A doll has no sense in the first place and a man has less after a girl gets through playing with him. She will work hard to get him broke in and then she will turn and rend him, in fact, she will be good to him for years just to get a chance to kick him once." Get wise, boys, get wise.

MAKING AMERICAN CITIZENS OUT OF EUROPEAN STOCK

CONFERRING franchise rights upon the hosts of aliens who annually express their desire to become full-fledged citizens in the land of their adoption is a work the importance of which is too often underestimated. It is not enough to know that the applicant has resided in the United States the prescribed length of time. If that were the only condition the naturalization bureau might as well be abolished.

There are plenty of foreigners in the country who have been here several times five years and yet are no more fit for citizenship than on the day they landed at some Atlantic seaport, all their belongings carried in odd-looking and unsavory smelling boxes and packs. They will never be qualified for citizenship, either, although many are numbered among those who have made aplication.

Formerly the law was full of loopholes. One of the most flagrant abuses arose from the fact that the alien who produced two witnesses to swear that he came to this country before he was eighteen years of age could get his first and second papers at one and the same time. Under the old system the court had no means for ascertaining the truth or falsity of the statements made by the applicant and his witnesses. It was inevitable that abuses should creep in, however careful the judge before whom the aspiring immigrant appeared might be, for tracing out the antecedents of hundreds of obscure aliens is a tedious and costly undertaking. All this has been changed. First papers can be taken out as soon as the newcomer lands, but he can not apply for second papers until he has been a resident of the United States for five years. Even the first paper has its limitations, becoming valueless at the end of seven years unless in the meantime second papers have been taken out. Then the aplicant must begin all over.

Humor frequently creeps in, although to the applicant the situation is anything but funny. Some of the answers given to the inquiries propounded by the government's attorney and the court are mirth-provoking.

In the meantime the naturalization examiners are busy with the applicant and his witnesses. Notice is sent him to appear before the examiners, where he is subjected to a rigid examination regarding his past. No detail is overlooked, and it is a formidable list of questions with which the aspiring foreigner is plied. When he emerges from the ordeal he has a new understanding of what it means to become an American citizen. The examiners take nothing for granted. They investigate the moral fitness of the applicant, his home life, his means of gaining a livelihood, the progress he has made since coming to the country, and whether he has shown any appreciation of American institutions.

They're a cosmopoliton lot, these applicants for admission, although you can not fail to be impressed with the transformation that has taken place in the years they have been in this country. It is no longer the immigrant, with his queer cut clothes and his heavy boots, his frowzly beard and dinky cap, but a clean cut, well dressed man in whom characteristics of the fatherland are no longer noticeable, and who, were it not for the lingering traces of his native tongue, would easily pass muster as American born. Not all belong to this class, of course. There are exceptions. Most of the applicants are Italians, Hungarians, Austrians and Poles. There are also many Russian Jews, while not a few come from Germany, the British Isles and Canada.

It is impossible for a judge to enter into the merits of a case as fully as he might desire. Here the assistant United States attorney proves his worth. He takes the evidence procured by the examiners, assembles it, judges of the merits of the case, and in this way is in a position to assist the courts in determining what action to take. When you remember that during the last decade some eight millions of foreigners have landed in America, and that during the fiscal year ending June 30 last 136,000 of these aliens applied for first papers and 42,000 for second papers, and that but 25,000 of these latter secured them, the rest being rejected, the importance of the work becomes apparent.

EVELYN NESBIT THAW ON WITNESS STAND.

EVELYN THAW, in a sensational interview in a New York newspaper, declares that she tried for three years to prevent the murder of Stanford White by Harry Thaw. She asserts that Thaw stole her from White, whom she dearly loved, by flourishing a pistol and threatening to kill him. She admits she is what she calls "unmoral," but wants it understood that she never committed a crime. Thaw she denounces as a "miserable man," and says he was "absolutely stingy." She relates how he flogged a hotel page and then rubbed salt into the boy's wounds. At the murder trial Evelyn was a witness in favor of Thaw and it will be remembered how sensationally she related all the pathetic and nauseating incidents of her life. Recently, however, at the hearing by which Thaw sought to obtain release from the Matteawan asylum, she was a State witness. She is not anxious that Harry should have his liberty, for she fears him. She testified that since his confinement he had threatened to kill her.

CHOICE OF THE PRESIDENTS

Preferences of Chester A. Arthur, Pierre Lorillard and Several Stage Favorites.

Eugene May, a member of the Stewards' Club of New York, boasts that he has waited on more presidents, millionaires, actors and actresses of world-wide fame than any other man in this country. Mr. May was manager of the Overlook Mountain House in the Catskills when President Arthur stopped there. The presidential party arrived a few hours late, the delay being caused by the president, who stopped at a brook and succeeded in landing half a dozen trout. Mr. Arthur insisted on going to the kitchen to have them cooked in butter, not taking any chances on lard being used.

Mr. May said that canvasback ducks roasted with the breast placed on toast, the remainder of the fowl being placed in a press, the juices squeezed out, season with salt, pepper and lemon and poured over the toast, and the whole served with fried hominy and currant jelly, was a favorite dish of the ex-president, who was also very fond of woodcock and very particular about his Hollandaise sauce, which he wanted served with fish and asparagus.

Dinner to President Grant.

During the second term of President Grant he was the guest of a Paterson (N. J.) silk manufacturer at a banquet. One of the worst storms that Paterson ever experienced took place on the day of the dinner and only seventy-five guests appeared in the hall. Under the circumstances there was such a surplus of wine that the waiters pressed it upon everybody within reach to get rid of it. Mr. May, who was the caterer, said the president gave a look of amazement when one of the waiters leaned over and said:

"Have some more sherry, general."

Just the same Gen. Grant took some more sherry.

While Mr. May was connected with the Hotel Richelieu he attended to the whims of Mme. Patti and her husband, Mr. Nicolini. Patti then looked like a naive school girl, but knew what she wanted and refused to accept something just as good.

Melba had her secretary look after the cooking of her meals and was very fond of French cooking, her favorite dish being chicken breast with truffle sauce. Mme. Calve was very fond of newly invented dishes. Sir Henry Irving was considered a crank in regards to his meals. His valet always prepared his tea, which was carried along as personal baggage.

Vera Pryce.

JAMES WALTER VERNON.

James W. Vernon, of Des Moines, Iowa, was rescued from drowning by his sweetheart, Vera Pryce, at the Seventy-fifth street bathing beach in Chicago.

Miss Pryce also lives in Des Moines, and has been visiting Chicago friends with Vernon. They had been at the beach for two hours, racing in the water, and Vernon was attacked by a cramp. He called for help and sank. Miss Pryce, who was swimming ahead, turned and dived in an effort to reach him. She grasped his bathing suit and dragged him to shallow water despite his resistance due to fright.

EARLY DAYS OF STEAM.

When the Problem Confronting the Navigation of the Atlantic Was Solved.

ADVANCE MADE IN ECONOMY

Changes Resulting from the Introduction of the Surface Condenser on Steamships.

While the Mauretania and Lusitania are making record voyages across the Atlantic it is not without interest to compare these gigantic ships and their work with the proposals of our grandfathers and our fathers.

Early steam navigators were just as much hampered by the necessity for landfalls as were the sailors of the days of Herodotus. They knew, it was true, where they were, but they could not proceed without coal, and as coal could not be had at sea they had to go into port to get it. Steam navigation to India attained to a certain measure of efficiency at an early period. In the very beginning a line was established between Falmouth and Corfu, the steamers calling at Malta and Coruna. The distance is 1,900 miles. The average speed was 7.25 knots. These figures supplied a basis for establishing a line of steamers on a paying system between this country and the United States.

Crossing Atlantic by Steam.

The question turned in the year 1836—that is to say, seventy-three years ago—on the possibility of carrying coal enough for the voyage. In 1836 a line from Bristol to the United State was contemplated. A second scheme brought before the public was for a line plying between the west coast of Ireland and Boston, touching at Halifax. Dr. Lardner, reasoning on the results of the Mediterranean practice and taking into consideration the adverse westerly winds which prevail on the Atlantic, decided that one ton of coal a horse power would be required for each 1,300 miles. He proposed, therefore, that the run should be, say, from Galway to Cape Breton, a distance of 1,900 miles. He added that it was possible railways might be made in Ireland, which would be a great help to the solution of the problem.

All this was considered in 1836 to be very sound engineering. It is remarkable, however, that every one spoke as though finality had been reached and the results obtained with the Falmouth-Corfu boats represented the best that could be done.

We have made considerable advances in the way of economy since 1836, and these advances have been in nine cases out of ten the result of the labors of the so-called "practical" man. The first and greatest of all was the introduction of the surface condenser. The benefit conferred by the surface condenser lay in the circumstance that it permitted high-pressure steam to be used, and with it expansion. So far as can be ascertained the best results obtained with the most improved engines working with a boiler pressure of thirty pounds per square inch—the maximum limit with sea water—were about three pounds of coal per indicated horse power per hour.

Work of Samuel Cunard.

There is reason to believe that the figures concerning steamships in the Mediterranean, on which Lardner based his reasoning, were exceptionally bad even for that time. A committee had been appointed by the house of commons to determine the expediency of opening up steam communication with India.

As a matter of fact, no fewer than seven steamships made numerous trips across the Atlantic, and their failure to maintain the service was not mechanical, but commercial; and it was not until about 1850 that the late Sir Samuel Cunard was able to establish a permanent Atlantic service, and then only with the help of a large government postal subsidy.

Civil War Stories

General Grant's Coolness.

"General Grant," said Capt. E. N. K. Talcott of Chicago, in speaking of the military experience which brought him in contact with the commander, "had the best memory, was the most level-headed and quiet, and the ablest man I ever met."

During the close of the operations about Richmond Captain Talcott was in charge of the engineer depot at the Bermuda Hundreds, from which the wants of the great vise which was slowly closed upon Lee by Grant were supplied, and his position brought him in constant contact both with headquarters and the general. Like every other man whom I ever met who had come in contact with General Grant in action, he was impressed with the extraordinarily quick perception with which he seized every incident.

"While I was on General Foster's staff," said Captain Talcott, "General Grant once came to our line with his staff, and we all stood on a little knoll opposite which was a Confederate battery, the number of whose guns General Grant wanted to find out, in order to learn what it would cost to take it. Instead of leaving the staff officer to count the flashes of the guns as almost any other man would have done, he stood on the knoll and began watching them. Of course, as soon as he stepped there General Foster went there, Grant's personal staff followed him and General Foster's personal staff stepped alongside of their commander. This made the prettiest mark you ever saw. We were near enough for the battery to see that we were officers. It was a large group of officers, and while the shells were going over Grant's head when he stepped there, it was not very long before they began to get the range, and pretty soon a shell struck the ground and threw sand all over us. By this time Rawlins, who was always anxious over his chief, said:

"'General, this is top exposed a position for you to stand in.'

"'Well,' said Grant, without taking the cigar out of his teeth or turning his head as he watched the flashes, 'if you don't like it you had better get down under the knoll.'

"General Rawlins did not move, and another shell reminded everybody that the battery was getting the range very closely. 'You gentlemen,' said Grant, again without turning, 'have nothing to do up here and I guess you had better get under cover at once.' And, waiting a moment longer until he had settled the number of the battery to his satisfaction, Grant went back alone to the shelter of the knoll.

"At another time in the closing operations around Petersburg, it happened that I was, with the Tenth Corps, General Terry's, which was in action with its right resting on General Hancock's, the Second. Between the two ran a deep ravine, at the head of which was a Confederate battery, and as the fire of the battery commanded the ravine the entire length, it had not been considered possible for the troops to stand at the bottom of the ravine under fire. General Grant rode up and said to General Terry: 'What does this mean? Why aren't these lines connected? They will sweep right in here and sweep you right and left. General Terry explained the circumstances at some length, but Grant, who had been watching the ravine, interrupted him to say, 'What troops have you got here?'

"'The One Hundredth New York,' said General Terry.

"'Colonel Dandy's regiment. Send him here,' said Grant. Now Dandy was a West-Pointer and a whooper. He rode up and saluted as General Grant said:

"'I want you to take your regiment down and connect these lines in that ravine.' Colonel Dandy saluted again, with, 'Certainly, Sir,' formed his regiment as if he was going out on dress parade, colors in the center, and swung down into the ravine under fire of the battery, and when the work was over rode back, with another salute.

"'The lines are connected, sir.'

"'How many men did you lose?' asked General Grant.

"'None, sir,' said Colonel Dandy.

"'I thought so,' replied General Grant.

"And then every one saw what Grant had seen as he rode up and looked over the field—the twigs which were falling from the trees under the fire of shot and shell from the Confederate battery only came from the top branches. The battery was firing over the ravine and the men who marched into its bed were as safe as anywhere in the line."

Kissed Him for His Mother.

At a small village in the mountain region of Tennessee, where a company of Federal soldiers were quartered, a report was started one day that a Confederate prisoner at the quarters had died. The report soon spread, and, reaching the mountain section, down came one of the belles of that region, who said she wanted to kiss the dead Confederate for his mother. She applied at the headquarters for permission to see the dead soldier, expressing her desire by way of showing her love for the Southern cause. The officer of the day concluded to play a joke on Lieutenant L——, he being in one of the back rooms of the house used for a headquarters, taking a nap. As there was no Confederate dead the officer did not like to see the mountain beauty disappointed; so he told her the Confederate corpse was in the back room, showing her the way. When the door was opened there lay the lieutenant on his back asleep on a cot. The ardent Southern girl rushed up to him, threw her arms around his prostrate form, and exclaimed, "Oh, let me kiss him for his mother!" at the same time pressing her lips to his brow.

This rather novel procedure awakened the lieutenant, and he took in the situation at a glance, clasped the mountain daisy in his arms, and, returning the salute, exclaimed:

"Never mind the old lady. Go it on your own hook, gal. I'm willing."

Before the little Southern lady could extricate herself from the lieutenant's embrace she was not only kissed for her mother but for the whole family.

On the Picket Line.

A good many of those picket line adventures never found place in official reports or the letters of army correspondents. They were in every case violations of instructions, and to have spoken of them to superior officers would have been to invite punishment; so by a sort of free-masonry of the picket line some of the most startling adventures of private soldiers never went to record. As for myself, I was a little conscientious in the matter of obeying orders, and only in one case did I make any departure from the strict line of a soldier's duty. It was while we were in front of Chattanooga that it became fashionable along the picket line to exchange papers. The plan was for a Confederate who wanted a paper to come to the front, shake a Southern paper as a flag of truce, and in this way invite exchange.

The pickets on either side in that immediate vicinity would cease firing, the Union soldier would start from his line and the Confederate from his line, and they would meet half way, shake hands, exchange papers and if there were no officers in sight, sit down and have a chat. This had been kept up for several days when there came an order from headquarters that no more papers should be exchanged. But the "boys," choosing their own time for exchange, continued the practice against orders. There came a week, however, in which no rebel responded to waving, or shaking, or fluttering of paper or handkerchief, and we knew then that orders against exchange had been issued on that side as well as on ours.

But one morning quite early my partner discovered a man on the rebel line frantically waving a large paper. He suggested that we slip away from the reserve and go out and see what the man wanted. He took a paper, waved it, and we started toward the rebel in front. When we had proceeded about half way to the point of meeting the fellow ceased to wave his paper. We were puzzled at this, but finally concluded that he was down in a hollow and we would see him when he came up on high ground. So we walked on and walked without warning into a group of soldiers at the rebel picket line.

The men were just ready to take breakfast, and after the first flurry they joked us a good deal about our extraordinary willingness to get into their clutches at breakfast time. When we spoke of the exchange of papers the officer in charge informed us that orders were positive against exchange, and that all his men understood it. As this was the case he took the position that we had come willingly into their lines, and that he could not allow us to return. I saw at once that his men disagreed with him, but the question was how we were to get away.

My partner, who had been a soldier in Germany, exhibited the greatest nonchalance, and he joined in the jokes at our expense and proposed that he make the "boys" some coffee that was coffee. The Confederates had a very poor excuse for that article, and without more ado he proceeded to make a little kettle of coffee, the aroma of which seemed to fascinate the coffee-hungry sharpshooters. When he had poured the coffee into the cups and had expatiated on the good it would do the men, he took up his rifle and said to me: "Now let us start for our own line." I followed him, and not a rebel soldier on that picket post lowered the cup of coffee from his lips or looked in our direction. I never disobeyed orders after that.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Michael O'Graff's Mistake.

A member of the Irish Sixty-ninth New York was taken prisoner one day, but by a strategic movement managed to shoot his captor. Taking a circuitous route and skulking about for a day, he finally came on a group of officers. Rushing into their midst, he kicked up his heels in true Irish polka style, and exclaimed:

"Be ——, but I'm safe at last! Hurry fur the shtars and stroips oov our oon blessed Amereky, and the divil fly away wid the ribels!"

"Hello, Paddy! what is the matter?" said one.

"Matter is it? Begorry, there be matter enough out in the field yander where Ol killed the dirty spalpane who was after stealing me body. Divel a one of them is able to take the loikes of a Sixty-ninth boy. But me name is not Paddy; it is Michael O'Graff, at yer service, sir."

"You were taken prisoner by the rebels, were you, Mike?" said one of the officers.

"Ol was sir, and it is no disgrace to get away."

"And you escaped?" said the officer.

"That is thrue, sir."

"And you killed your captor?"

"Ol did, yer honor, and his thaving carcass lies out in the field beyant, an imblim of my courage."

"You seem to be a loyal Union man?" said the officer.

"Niver a loyaler one iver popped a Confiderate, begorry, sir."

The officer then turned to a subordinate and said:

"Lieutenant, secure this prisoner."

"Holy Moses!" exclaimed Mike, "what have I done? Begorry, and O'll make me word good, and may the divel take the hindmost," said Mike, as he started to run. But he was soon recaptured.

Mike had made a mistake, and had been talking to General Wilcox and staff.

Made Over by Quitting Coffee.

Coffee probably wrecks a greater percentage of Southerners than of Northern people for Southerners use it more freely.

The work it does is distressing enough in some instances; as an illustration, a woman of Richmond, Va., writes:

"I was a coffee drinker for years and for about six years my health was completely shattered. I suffered fearfully with headaches and nervousness, also palpitation of the heart and loss of appetite.

"My sight gradually began to fail and finally I lost the sight of one eye altogether. The eye was operated upon and the sight partially restored, then I became totally blind in the other eye.

"My doctor used to urge me to give up coffee, but I was willful and continued to drink it until finally in a case of severe illness the doctor insisted that I must give up the coffee, so I began using Postum and in a month I felt like a new creature.

"I steadily gained in health and strength. About a month ago I began using Grape-Nuts food and the effect has been wonderful. I really feel like a new woman and have gained about 25 pounds.

"I am quite an elderly lady and before using Postum and Grape-Nuts I could not walk a square without exceeding fatigue, now I walk ten or twelve without feeling it. Formerly in reading I could remember but little but now my memory holds fast what I read.

"Several friends who have seen the remarkable effects of Postum and Grape-Nuts on me have urged that I give the facts to the public for the sake of suffering humanity, so, although I dislike publicity, you can publish this letter if you like."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Homemade Ditch Digger.

A complete homemade ditch digger may be made by following the description here give.

The bed piece, five and a half inches long, is cut out of a hard plank two and a half inches thick, bolted at each end and in the middle to prevent splitting. The rear half is nine inches wide and the front half six inches wide.

The diggers are made of steel bars two and a half inches wide, three-quarters of an inch thick and twenty-four inches long. They are fastened to the plank by a right angle turn and bolted. The two rear diggers are held firmly by a rod with nuts inside and out, the points being spread out so that the bed piece can easily drop into the space when the ditch is two feet or more in depth. The front digger is the same size, but set in the middle. All are held firmly by brace rods and sharpened like the flat end of a pickax. A wheel is set under the front end to steady the movement and is braced backward. An adjustable draw iron is placed above, through which the rod may pass at any height suited to the depth of the ditch.

The handles are also adjustable, raising them as the digger drops lower.

In hard subsoils one wil save the cost of this simple device in digging seventy-five rods of ditch. In our hardpan sections of the east, which always need drainage, one does not feel encouraged to dig ditches with pick and shovel when more than half the energy is required to loosen the dirt. With this machine the toughest subsoil when dry handles as rapidly as loose sand.

Keeping Cream Sweet.

The first step in keeping cream sweet is to keep it as clean as possible. Clean cream cannot be produced by filthy methods of milking nor by handling the cream or milk in unclean utensils. Milk cans, stirrers and pails should be thoroughly scalded in hot water and dried and exposed to the sunlight and pure air.

The next step is to remove the animal heat from the cream as soon as possible after separating. Run the cream from the separator into a convenient utensil for cooling. A 3 or 5-gallon shotgun can is most convenient. Cool the cream in well water by stirring. In a few minutes it can be reduced to the temperature of the water. After the cream is cooled it can be added to the cream contained in the supply can used in delivering cream to the station. The cream supply can, while being filled and held for delivery, should be kept in water at as near the temperature of freshly pumped water as possible. The average temperature of well water in Kansas is about 56 degrees. With it cream can easily be held at 58 or 60 degrees, and at this temperature will remain sweet for delivery in good shape at the station.—Kansas Farmer.

Weed Seeds in Manure.

It is well known that there is considerable risk of introducing new weeds by the purchase of manure and hay and other feeding stuffs. E. I. Oswald, of the Maryland experiment station, undertook to obtain more definite information on this point, especially as regards dissemination through manure, by studying the effect of the fermentation of manure handled in different ways and of passing through the digestive systems of animals on the vitality of various seeds, including seeds of about fifty of the worst weeds found in Maryland.

In experiments in which the manure remained for six months in a barnyard heap and for a short while in piles, as when shipped in carload lots from cities, it was found that in the first case there was no danger, and in the second case little danger of distributing live weed seeds.

A Fruit Tree Doctor Fake.

The latest fake practiced on farmers is done by a man who visits the place and claims that he has been sent out by the State to examine fruit tree diseases, says an exchange. The fellow will go over the orchard and mark all trees which he claims are affected. Shortly after his visit a confederate will appear and say that he has a preparation which will cure the disease for which the tree is condemned and will contract to inject a fluid into the roots for a certain price. Both men are swindlers and should be run off the place with a shotgun. The only men empowered to inspect orchards are the county inspectors, who are known to most fruit growers.

Grain or Butter?

Every dairy butter maker whose product is known to be of uniform good quality can now easily contract all of their surplus at 25 cents per pound the year round. And yet the quality designated as "common country butter" nearly always sells below that price and during four or five summer months goes as low as 12 cents. Why—why will its makers be content to follow methods that spell positive loss? Who can and will answer this question?—The Ruralist.

Peaches that Stand Rot.

Peaches are more liable to rot in damp and muggy weather than when cool and dry. Some varieties are more subject to rot than others. That all varieties with fuzz on them are less liable to rot than the smoother varieties does not agree with my experience.

Neither can correct conclusion be drawn from one or two season's experience, for soil, location, fertilization and culture also are factors in the rot problem. Fruit on a rankly-grown tree is much more subject to rot than on one more moderately grown. Yet I think the weather has more to do with it than any one factor. One year all our early peaches were quite subject to rot, while the next year there was very little rot. Yet with unfavorable weather Champions were practically a total loss, Crosby, stump and late varieties practically free. I do not think the matter of fuzz vs. rot worth considering as a factor in setting an orchard, except people do not wish to buy fuzz.

In regard to hardiness of bud, a good frost peach well grown will stand more cold than any other peach tree we ever had on our grounds. And varieties of the frost type (if I may call them so), Crosby, Pratt's, Hill's Chili, etc., are more hardy in bud than many other varieties, especially of the Crawford class, but with the varieties of the Chinese type, which bear young and have a hardy bud, what little hardiness, if any, the fuzzy varieties possess above them is much more than offset by their failings.—H. Mead, Massachusetts.

Red Clover vs. Alfalfa.

Some of the old-time dairymen are coming around to the belief that red clover such as was grown around Denver twenty-five or thirty years ago, is better forage for the production of milk than is alfalfa as grown nowadays. Certain it is that we are not now getting the quality of milk that was produced a quarter of a century ago, when nearly everybody had a little patch of clover. It was quite natural, however, that we should have exchanged the old friend for the new, for the reason that red clover is biennial in its habit of growth and under the most ideal condifions will not furnish more than two cuttings of hay in a season. On the other hand, alfalfa is a perennial plant, and when once established will continue to produce four and frequently five crops in a season for several years in succession, and this is why our dairymen have clung to it through all these years like a pup to a root. We are loth to concede that red clover is the better forage in the production of milk, but it does look that way, and we know farmers in different parts of the State who are taking up its culture quite extensively.—Denver Field and Farm.

Ventilation of Stable.

This diagram shows method of constructing a fresh air intake where the soil comes to or near the top of wall as found in many bank barns. An excavation is necessary and a retaining wall is built around the open space marked C.

Gasoline vs. a Hired Man.

Then there's our gasoline engine. I kept track of it once for three weeks It pumped water to the house and to the barn, separated the cream of twenty cows and churned and worked all the butter on 5 gallons of gasoline at 15 cents a gallon. It saws the wood and works the corn-shredder and makes itself generally more useful in its way than the average hired man and at a small fraction of his cost. Then, the barn is a great comfort. There's a cement basement under the stable—the only one of its kind in this part of the State. The manure falls through traps in the stable floor and is preserved intact and put out on the land at least four times a year. That's another thing that gives us no end of advantage over our neighbors. They pile their fertilizer in their barnyard and let the best part of it bleach and drain and wash away without returning it to the soil which absolutely demands it.

We have 150 acres of level, black soil that plows like soft putty. Besides corn, oats and wheat, we raise hay, flax and enough vegetables for our own use. But we have found that we can make far more money from our pure bred cows than directly from the soil.—Success.

Cabbage Worms.

The common cabbage worm is among the best known of all garden pests, both as a larvae and in the adult stage, when it becomes the common spotted, white cabbage butterfly. The young plants should be sprayed with arsenate of lead, 1 ounce to a gallon of water, and the foliage kept covered until they begin to head up well. Water heated to 130 degrees Fahrenheit will destroy all worms which it hits, without injury to the plants.

To Guard Against Cut Worms.

Tar paper placed around cabbage and tomato plants will keep off cutworms. Insert the paper in the ground, making a circle about 4 inches in diameter and 3 inches deep.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Maraschino Cherries.

Pit the cherries and weigh them saving all the juice. To every four pounds of fruit there must be two pounds of sugar and a cup of liquid. Enough juice should exude during the stoning process to furnish the liquid, but if not add a little water. Make a sirup of the sugar and water, set at the side of the range and bring to the boiling point. Take from the fire and, while still warm but not scalding hot, pour the sirup over the cherries. Set aside for half an hour, then put over the fire in a porcelain lined kettle and heat slowly. Boil for five minutes, take out the fruit with a skimmer, boil the sirup for twenty minutes, skimming off the scum as it rises and, just before taking from the fire, add a pint of Maraschino cordial for every four quarts of fruit. Pack the cherries in jars, fill each jar to overflowing with the liquid and seal.

Citron Preserves.

Pare the fruit and cut it into slices about the size of a caramel, weigh the fruit and to each pound of it allow one-half pound of sugar. Put the citron on to cook in fresh water and boil until quite clear, remove carefully to a colander and drain. Wet the sugar with clear water and boil until reduced to a sirup, add to this sirup one lemon, sliced thin, and a piece of ginger root for every pound of sugar that has been used. Put the citron into the sirup and boil together for twenty minutes. Fill jars with the fruit, pour in the sirup and seal."

Boiled Raisin Cake.

Cover one and a half cups of raisins (seeded) with boiling water and simmer twenty minutes. Cream three-quarters of a cup of sugar with a quarter of a cup of butter, and add one and one-half cups of flour, half a cup of the raisin water and one egg beaten light, but not separated. One teaspoonful of soda should be sifted with the flour. Season with one teaspoonful each of nutmeg and cinnamon, add the raisins, well dredged with flour and bake one-half hour. An excellent cake, cheap, easily made, and with a flavor of its own.

Watermelon Pickle.

Use one melon. Cut out heart, peel rind, cut into squares and soak over night in strong salt water. Put one quart vinegar on to boil, stir in five coffee cups sugar, one teaspoon cloves and five sticks of cinnamon, one grated nutmeg and one-half lemon. Add rind that has been rinsed in cold water. Boil ten minutes, put in jars. Not necessary to seal.

Cooking New Potatoes.

Place them in boiling water with two or three sprigs of mint. When they are cooked and drained pour over them some melted butter. The mint adds a more delicious flavor. New potatoes should have the skins removed by rubbing them with a brush. When rubbed they will be white and smooth.

Filling for Cake.

One cup of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of water boiled till clear. Stir into the beaten white of one egg quickly and add one-half cup seeded and chopped fine raisins and one-half cup chopped hickory nuts or English walnut meats.

Loosening Cakes from the Pans.

After baking a cake and if it sticks to the pan, the easiest way to take it out without breaking it is to wet a clean cloth and wrap around the pan. It will come out all together.

Curried Eggs.

Four eggs, one ounce of butter, one ounce of chopped onion, half an ounce of flour, one gill of milk and water, one teaspoonful of curry powder, the juice of half a lemon, boiled rice.

To Improve Coffee.

Add to the pot of coffee when ready to serve a half teaspoon of vanila and a pinch of baking soda the size of a bean. The soda destroys the sour taste caused by the free acid in the coffee.

Short Suggestions.

Keep a bag of sulphur in the bird cage to drive away lice in hot weather.

Ice cream becomes butter if it is not allowed to chill before the can is turned in the ice.

To preserve pineapple, allow only three-quarters of a pound of sugar to each pound of pineapple.

A small broom made of stiff wire is convenient for use in cleaning skillets. Such a brush is easily kept clean.

When mosquitoes get into the house heat a shovel, pour a teaspoonful of carbolic acid on it and burn. It kills or drives them out.

To clean milk vessels rinse first with cold water, then wash with tepid water and rinse. Soda purifies the sour milk pitcher.

For afternoon tea toast seems to be better liked than almost anything else. It is thin and is cut in round or diamond-shaped pieces.

A little white oilcloth apron can be worn while giving children their bath. It is also useful while washing dishes. Bind the edges with white tape.

To kill fleas on a pet dog, if the animal is small, place him in a small bathtub of water and comb the hair with a fine comb. Water drowns these pests.

Cut glass looks clearest when washed in tepid water and brushed with a dry bristle brush. A crystal polish increases the brilliancy of old pieces.

Rancid butter is clarified for baking purposes by heating it in hot water. The butter should then be set aside to cool. It rises to the top and can be lifted off with a knife. It should be used at once. Add a little salt to the water.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the
National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

Time to Intervene.

A Newark newspaper prints the following amusing little story: While on his way home one night recently a small boy rushed up to Policeman John Eckerline, of the First Precinct, and, in great excitement, said:

"Hey, officer, my father and another man have been a fightin' around the corner for the last hour."

"Well, why didn't you call an officer sooner?" asked Eckerline, as he accompanied his guide to the scene of the combat.

"Why," said the precocious youngster, "paw was gettin' the best of it up to a few minutes ago, but de other guy has got his second wind now, an' he's wipin' de street wid the old man."

A SURE SIGN.

When It Appears Act at Once.

Trouble with the kidney secretions is a certain sign that your kidneys are deranged—that you should use Doan's Kidney Pills. They cure all irregularities and annoyances, remove backache and side pains and restore the kidneys to health. Mrs. John B. Whittaker, 303 Jefferson St., Madison, Ind., says: "Kidney trouble caused me to suffer terribly from headaches, backaches and extreme weakness. I had days of depression and languor and at times my ankles swelled. I was nervous and worn out. Doctors and kidney remedies failed to help until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. I am in better health now than I have been for years, thanks to them."

A Max O'Rell Story.

Before he attained fame with his various books M. Blouet (Max O'Rell), who was for several years French master at St. Paul's school, related how he obtained his post there. After two or three other applicants had returned unsuccessful from their interview with Dr. Walker, who was at the time headmaster of the school, M. Blouet's turn came.

"I want," said the doctor after a few words, "a French master who can preserve discipline." My last was a perfect gentleman and a good fellow, but he could not keep the classes in order. The end of it was that after being much worried by one of the boys the poor fellow went home and shot himself."

"Sir," replied Max O'Rell, "that is where my countryman made a little mistake. I should have shot the boy."

The doctor rose, says M. Blouet, and grasped my hand.

"M. Blouet," he exclaimed, "you are my French master!"—London Captain.

FASHION HINTS

The attractive feature of this pongee gown is the embroidery done in daisy pattern, in silk to match the material. The waist and sleeve effect is also novel.

TIDES OF PUGET SOUND.

Reach a Height of Twenty Feet—Dangerous Stretch of Water.

The waters of the Narrows, from which a party of University of Puget Sound students escaped through good fortune after a boat was upset, are treacherous, says the Tacoma Ledger. It is a place of terrible tides.

Viewed from the precipitous shores the surging waters are magnificent. The scene has been compared with the Hudson above New York City. The waters of that part of Puget Sound which extends to Olympia, Mud Bay, Shelton and Henderson Bay, a vast inland sea within itself, all flow in and out of the Narrows.

In the upper reaches of the sound some twenty-five or thirty miles from the Narrows the tides attain a height of more than twenty feet. When the tides begin to fall all the accumulated water rushes out through the Narrows like a great river at flood. In like manner when the tide sets in the direction of Olympia the Narrows become a swift and turbulent stream. Frightful whirlpools are numerous. Streams running powerfully in contrary directions strike and the water boils.

Large steamboats struck by the contrary currents groan and creak and sway under the strain. This being so, it is no wonder that small craft often overturn in the Narrows. A whirlpool has been known to seize a rowboat and twist it 'round and 'round until the rowers almost despaired of coming out alive.

It is a marvelously beautiful water with all its terrors, and hundreds and thousands will continue to find pleasure there notwithstanding the summer tragedies. The rumble of the tides when running at full is like the distant rumble of the ocean. The terrors of the sea are an element of its charm, and so it is with the terrors of the Narrows.

Her Gifted Relative.

"I've got a cousin on my mother's side," remarked Mrs. Lapsling, "who can do anything with her left hand that she can do with her right. I tell you, it's a great thing for a person to be amphibious."

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething; softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25 cents a bottle.

Result of Poor Writing.

The Duke of Wellington, through misreading a badly written letter, made a ludicrous blunder. This letter was written by C. J. London, a botanical author, who wrote to the duke requesting the privilege of seeing his beautiful beeches. The duke misread the signature for that of C. J. Bloomfield, bishop of London, and wrote in reply: "My lord, I shall always be glad to see you at Strattonfieldsaye, and my servant will show you as many pairs of my breeches as you may choose to inspect. But what you want to see them for is quite beyond me."—Exchange.

Sore throat is no trifling ailment. It will sometimes carry infection to the entire system through the food that is eaten. Hamlins Wizard Oil is a sure, quick cure.

"Too Pat.

A pun is often the easiest as well as the lowest form of wit. An example of the kind of pun to be strictly avoided is given in the following story, taken from the Chicago News. A customer went into a music store to look over some songs.

"How do you sell your music?" she asked of the clerk.

"It depends on the kind you want," said that individual. "We sell piano music by the pound, and organ music by the choir."

The customer did not buy any.

In the King's Name.

An odor of unconscious humor hangs about a justice of the peace of whom a Canadian contributor to the London Outlook tells.

His name was Alexander Beggs, and one day a farmer was brought up before him for allowing a cow with an infectious disease to wander at large. The magistrate promptly ordered the cow shot and fined the owner $10.

But when he filled up the conviction slip, by a slip of the pen he sentenced the owner to be shot and the cow to be fined $10. Then, as the King's direct representative, he signed it:

Don't say that it doesn't matter how you look around the house, for it does matter a good deal. It matters for the general credit of the establishment of which the feminine head is the creditable or questionable representative; it matters in its example to the children and to the help; it matters to the husband and father, who usually, if he is half a man, feels a sense of pride in the appearance of his family. It is poor encouragement to him to find confusion and carelessness in dress and waste and destruction running riot about his dwelling. It is one of the important duties of every woman to keep herself and her house in as good condition as possible, considering her circumstances.

The Secret of Long Life

A French scientist has discovered one secret of long life. His method deals with the blood. But long ago millions of Americans had proved Electric Bitters prolongs life and makes it worth living. It purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood, rebuilds wasted nerve cells, imparts life and tone to the entire system. Its a godsend to weak sick and debilitated people. The Gag.

Henry E. Dixey, at a dinner in New York, talked about gagging—about the ability, reasonably common among actors, of introducing impromptu jokes into a part.

"Nearly all of us can gag," said Mr. Dixey. "Usually, though, the gagging is of a selfish nature. I'll explain to you what I mean. Once, at the beginning of my career, I played the part of a footman. I wore in this part a very broad white collar, a kind of Eton collar. Well, the leading man told me one night that, with my help, he would introduce a gag.

"'All right,' said I. 'What is the gag to be?'

"'You know how,' said the leading man, 'in the third act, I write a letter while you stand beside me and wait to carry it to your mistress? Well, after the letter is finished, I'll reach over to you in an absent way and wipe my pen on your white collar. Of course it will make a large black stain, but you will see—it will bring down the house.'

"I laughed harshly.

"'Capital,' I said. 'And I'll finish the thing off with a little gag of my own. As soon as you have wiped your pen on my nice collar, I'll wheel round and knock you down. Of course it will hurt you a little, but you'll see—it will be the hit of the show.'"

Last week Levins Reed dropped an open pocket knife which struck and penetrated one of his feet. He kept at work thinking the injury slight until his foot became black and very painful. Dr. Fanning was called and under his treatment. Mr. Reed is said to be getting well again.

It is probable that fewer people would want to dredge ditches made with boat dredges if they knew that by the law now in force they can only be repaired when a majority of those assessed, petition the trustees for the same. In many cases it is likely a majority would not sign a petition for the repair of a ditch and then repair work might be put off for many years. Ditches not dug by a dredge can be repaired every two years by the action of the trustees, but there is no certainty about the repairs of dredge ditches that are dug with a boat dredge. The more the present ditch law is examined the more defects are found in it.

RESULTS THAT REMAIN

Are Appreciated By Butler People

Thousands who suffer from backache and kidney complaint have tried one remedy after another, finding only temporary benefit. This is discouraging, but there is one special kidney medicine that cures permanently and there is plenty of proof right here in Butler.

Here is the testimony of one who used Doan's Kidney Pills years ago, and now states that the cure was lasting.

Mrs. Sadie Fee, N. Pearl Street, Butler, Ind., says: "I am glad to say that the cure made by Doan's Kidney Pills in our little boy's case has been permanent. The child was afflicted with a weakness of the kidneys and bed wetting was frequent. Finally I gave Doan's Kidney Pills a trial and they brought such great relief that in 1902, I publicly endorsed them. Up to this time my son has had no return of his former trouble and for that reason, I am glad to endorse Doan's Kidney Pills again."

are a sign of serious female complaint, that should have immediate attention.

If you begin in time, you can generally treat yourself at home, without the need of consulting a physician, by the regular use of Cardui, the well-known remedy for women's ills.

Composed of purely vegetable and perfectly harmless medicinal ingredients, being, besides, a gentle, non-intoxicating, strengthening tonic,

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMAN'S RELIEF

relieves all female complaints. "My wife," writes John A. Rodgers, of Hampden Sidney, Va., "was nothing but a walking skeleton, from female trouble. She suffered agonies with bearing-down pains, backache and headache. Doctors failed to relieve her, so she took Cardui, and is now entirely cured."

Nervous Collapse

"I have traveled for thirty years continually. I lost a great deal of sleep, which together with constant worry left me in such a nervous state that finally, after having two collapses of nervous prostration, I was obliged to give up traveling altogether. I doctored continually but with no relief. Dr. Miles' Nervine came to my rescue—I cannot describe the suffering which this Nervine saved me. Whenever I am particularly nervous a few doses relieve me." A. G. C. LIBBY, Wells, Me.

There are many nervous wrecks. There is nervous prostration of the stomach, of the bowels, and other organs. The brain, the kidneys, the liver, the nerve centers are all exhausted. There is but one thing to do—build up the nervous system by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Its strengthening influence upon the nervous system restores normal action to the organs, and when they all work in harmony, health is assured. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

NICOLAI BETRAYS HIS EMPLOYERS

Embezzeled $4,000 and Then Gives up. Long Sentence Awaits Him

The embarassing episode which has come into the life of Frank H. Nicolai, the young man who betrayed the confidence of his employers and is charged with being in default to the amount of $4,000, should be a lesson to every young man who has had the opportunity of reading concerning the case for the past week.

Not only did this young man have the confidence and respect of his employers, but many of the people thoroghout the county held him in high esteem up to the time of investigation which proved him a criminal.

The question arises, what caused Nicolai to go wrong? The answer is, high living—living beyond his income. Undoubtedly he started by taking a few dollars with the intention of putting it back before being found out. But he kept on associating with fast company instead of withdrawing from them, and the demand for more money kept growing and a little more was appropriated to meet expense, and so on until he fell a victim of the law. Nicolai did not get to be a bad man suddenly; it was by degrees that he descended to the lawless criminal which he is now considered by his once ardent admirers and by the people all over this part of the country. Those who were willing for him to lavish his money upon them and who called him a good fellow, are now pointing the finger of scorn as he lingers behind iron bars, or at large under bonds as the case may be.

The story is as follows:

Frank H. Nicolai, the former assistant cashier of the City National bank, of Auburn, under arrest for embezzlement charged with being a defaulter to the bank in the sum of over $4,000, was taken to Fort Wayne shortly before noon on Monday to appear in the United States district court there before T. J. Logan, the deputy United States commissioner, for the purpose of arranging the disposition of the criminal case which has been instituted against him.

He was in charge of H. W. Hoagland, of Washington, D. C., the special officer of the government department of justice, and Ralph Thomas, the sheriff of the county. Accompanying him was D. M. Link, his attorney, and also Eben Nicoali of Ashley, his brother. On the car, which left the station at 11:42, were the following personal friends of the prisoner: M. C. Sheets, Bert Beidler, T. A. Carter, William Brown, Frank Depew and T. C. Ford, who, it is said, were prepared to go on his bond for his release from jail until the United States grand jury meets in November, when his case will be brought before them.

Frank, in the custody of the special government officer and the sheriff, was waiting for several minutes before at the corner of ninth and Cedar streets, the first stop after leaving the interurban station. There he was met and greeted by a number of his friends, shrking hands and receiving their "good byes." He seemed to be his old time self, talking freely, laughing and joking. No trace of the cloud of sadness that rested on him was apparent. And this air of unconcern remained with him until, with the officers he boarded the car to go to Fort Wayne.

From his conversation it was apparent that he realized forcibly the fact that he was to spend the next few years of his life in prison, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, the government prison. While waiting for the car at the corner Dr. A. M. Oswalt stepped up and shook hands with him. "Doctor, he said smilingly, "if I should send for you after I get to Fort Leavenworth, you will come, won't you?"

It was in this way that he talked with all who came up to see him and he continued this apparent light heartedness until the car left. He was bright and cheerful, perfectly rational, and this had been his state during all the fore noon at the jail.

OBERLIN FAMILY REUNION HELD AT COLD SPRINGS

The Oberlin family reunion which was held at Cold Springs on Thursday, August 5, was a great success, and more than two hundred Oberlins from various parts of the country were present. The weather was all that could be desired—ideal for an occasion of that kind, and the day was spent in a most pleasurable manner, the program including boating, bathing, fishing and other sports.

The dinner was a sumptuous affair, the menu comprising all the good things that human skill can devise. Everyone present enjoyed this elegant spread, and during the dinner hour a constant flow of bright and witty conversation ensued.

After the feast a splendid program of music, song and speaking took place in the dance hall. Mr. Eugene Oberlin had this in charge, and the result was an hour of excellent entertainment. The program was as follows:

Piano Solo—Miss Ethel Nimmons.
Male Quartett—Eugene Oberlin, A. F. Brindley, Clyde Blaker and Fred Briggs.
Reading—Miss Nora Brown.
Piano Solo—Miss Mabel Oberlin.
Vocal Solo—Frank Abram.
Quartett—Misses Pearl and Garnet Brink and Opal and Hazel Kenan.
Selection—Male Quartett.

At the conclusion of the program all the Oberlins registered and the list showed up much larger than expected. The next reunion will be held at Cold Springs on the second Tuesday in August, 1910.

OPERA TO OPEN WITH GARTON'S MINSTRELS

Manager Jay Thompson, of the Butler opera house, tells the HERALD editor that the prospects for a successful season are good. He has booked a number of high class companies, the first of which will open Friday, August 20, being the Garton Minstrels, a company of no mean reputation, and carrying twenty-five people. They have their own band and orchestra.

The next attraction is the Shannons, a musical comedy, and will be here about the middle of September.

"The Fast Mail," by Rolland & Clifford, is another attraction which has made a big hit in the theatrical world, being formerly played by Lincoln J. Carter. This company will be here some time in December.

One of the strongest numbers which Mr. Thompson has booked is "The Fiddler and the Girl," the troop coming here direct from Fort Wayne.

A troop of thirty-five people, playing Uncle Tom, will open their season here, giving three days rehersal. They carry their own band and give a big free street parade. This attraction will be here October 16.

Mr. Thompson will advertise his shows more extensively than heretofore, and having an unusually strong list of plays expects to have a successful season.

Baughman Reunion

The second annual reunion of the Baughman family was held Sunday, Aug. 8, 1909, near the home of Solomon Baughman. The attendance was large, over two hundred being present, besides near friends and neighbors. A delegation of about thirty came from Ohio.

Promptly at 10:30 the president called for order and the secretary read the report of last meeting, followed by the report of the memorial committee, from which we learned that there had been three marriages, eight births and five deaths in the last year. The election of officers and appointing committee for the coming year was next in order. By unanimous vote Willis Baughman was re-elected president and Fred Keller treasurer. Mrs. Dora Boren was chosen secretary. By vote it was decided to change the time and place of next year's meeting. Next meeting to be held in the grove north of Auburn the third Sunday in August. The president then dismissed for dinner. The long tables were soon heaped full of the good things from the baskets and about 150 sat down to eat. The noon hour to many was perhaps the most pleasant of all, here friends and relatives met who had not met in twenty years. And a joyous meeting it was.

The afternoon exercises were enjoyed by all and the entertainment committee should be commended for their excellent program.

Mr. G. W. Sill, of Venedocia, Ohio, Ohio, gave us a brief talk on "How Time Changes." Mr. Sill came to Indiana over forty years ago and surely there has been a great change in the forty years.

The following is the afternoon program:

Opening Song—"All Hail the Power"
Mixed Quartet—"A Hundred Years From Now."
Recitation—Delight Miller.
Quartet—"Home Again."
Solo—Nora Pifer.
Mixed Quartet—"The Owl, the Parrot, the Duck and the Crow."
Recitation—Roy Bishop.
Address—Mr. G. W. Sill.
Solo—"I've Grown So Used to You"—Mrs. Mary Miser.
Duet—Truda Wilson and Fay Sherwood.
Male Quartet—"When the Twilight Shadows Fall."
Recitation—Lucile Hoodlemier.
Mixed Quartet—"Speckled Frog."
Recitation—Cas Kalb.
Male Quartet—"Friends of Long Ago."

Indianapolis, Ind., August 3, 1909.

HON. WALLACE C. WEBSTER, Butler, Indiana.

Dear Sir—I have yours of July 24, and confess you have raised a question that has been very interesting to me, and one to which I have given considerable study.

I have never seen a street constructed in the manner that you suggest, that is for the center portion to be lower than the outside portion—in other words to reverse the ordinary order of building a street. I have however, seen a number of alleys constructed in the manner which you suggest. I have often wished to see streets built in ike manner, especially brick streets. It would greatly assist in my judgment in preventing the disposition to expand, or rather the disposition to crack when the construction follows the expansion which occurs with almost all kinds of streets, made with brick, asphalt, wooden block or whatnot. And then, if streets were to be built as you mention, I am inclined to think that it would not necessitate so costly a curb, merely one sufficient to show a finish, and to prevent the wheels from getting upon the lawn or sidewalk.

I think your plan should be undertaken, it would not be necessary to make this depression in the center equal to that of the crown, for the reason that in case of the streets being improved with brick, the provision for the flow of water need not be nearly so great, as we are want to think.

I know of no reason why we have been disposed to incline towards considerable gutters in any well paved street, unless it be that we have been influenced from conditions requiring in case of gravel and merely graded streets, where necessity seems to demand a great big gutter to take off the water.

Whatever conclusion you may come to with regard to this grade, and you can scarcely make a mistake if you do conclude to carry out your ideas, although it will be new, there is this one thing that would afford me very great satisfaction, and it would be no less to the citizens of Butler if they would use extraordinary efforts to have our No. 1 specifications complied with in the construction of your proposed brick street work, especially in these things to-wit: That the foundation be made perfectly smooth, and conform in grade to that of the finished street, so that you may be able to place upon this a uniform two inches of sand cushion, and then see that the brick are rolled, and this cushion is thoroughly compacted by a steam roller, which will make the brick stand perpendicular, and you will secure thereby a perfectly level surface, entirely devoid of any depressions; and lastly succeed in having the filler applied in quality and in manner such as we lay down in our No. 1 specifications, and be sure that the cement is of good quality, that the sand is sharp and the full proportion is used. If you succeed, by reason of the fact that you propose to have so much go in at one time, Butler will have every chance of having the best lot of pavement that is in any town in Indiana, and it will be so satisfactory to the people that efforts towards securing these details are well worth while.

Although your city is flat, and you have been greatly troubled with the slow flow of water heretofore, you will all be surprised at the quick disappearance of the water from the properly constrncted brick street pavements. With much respect, I am

Very truly yours,
WILL P. BLAIR, Cor. Secretary
Of National Paving Brick Manufacturers Association.

I believe the manner of constructing pavements by having a depressed center instead of the oval as generally used to be the correct plan, as it seems to have all the advantages and no disadvantages that I can see. The drainage certainly would cost less as the manholes in center of streets would carry all water directly into the sewer, thereby saving and doing away with catch basins at side of streets. The curbing would cost less as it would not be so high. At the street crossings the sidewalks by just a slight rise in the pavement would come on a level instead of having to bridge or step up and down six or eight inches at each corner as in the other mode of paving. In turning corners or in meeting vehicles it would lessen the danger of slewing or tipping over, as the grade would incline the rig slightly to the center. I do not advocate this way of paving, however, because there may be objections we do not see, and we cannot afford to experiment.

We do know the usual way of construction can be relied upon even though it has objectionable features.

WALLACE C. WEBSTER.

The Secret of Long Life

A French scientist has discovered one secret of long life. His method deals with the blood. But long ago millions of Americans had proved Electric Bitters prolongs life and makes it worth living. It purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood, rebuilds wasted nerve cells, imparts life and tone to the entire system. Its a godsend to weak sick and debilitated people. "Kidney trouble had blighted my life for months," writes W. M. Sherman, of Cushing, Me., "but Electric Bitters cured me entirely." Only 50c, at Stone's drug store. 31 1m

Drug Store Goods That You want When You want them

The reason why we do so much business is as simple as one, two, three---the things most wanted are here when wanted.

Take for instance vacation wants---the myriad of things that were wanted in a hurry, all in a single week or two. You didn't need to wait until Geddes' Drug Store got them in, they were here when wanted.

And so on, we might go through the entire list of Drug Store Goods, and show how natural it is to have things wanted when wanted.

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure to be able to say in all earnestness that in Dr. C. J. Horton you are getting a citizen of whom you may well be proud; indeed, you will become so in time, as his personality is irresistable.

Dr. Horton was my family physician all during his residence in Argos, and I know whereof I speak when I say that he is thoroughly capable, conscientious and scrupulously clean—morally as well as in his work. I fully believe that his ambition caused him to seek a broader field, and I bespeak for him continued success which is richly deserved.

Very respectfully yours,
E. O. WICKIZER.

Boat Upsets in Maumee Bay.

Two men and one woman were drowned and seven were rescued under difficult circumstances when a launch containing a gay party of merrymakers capsized in Maumee Bay, 500 feet off of the Casino, a summer theater near Toledo, Ohio. All were residents of Toledo. The dead: Harry Dill and Frank Lehaney, both railway employes, and Mrs. Mabel Hudson, 30 years old. Dill was the owner of the boat and took out the party of ten men and one woman over the earnest protests of his wife. When over the deep channel of the bay near the Maumee river the launch turned turtle from the weight of the party, which had collected on one side. The woman was in the cabin and was unable to get out. Leo Barnes swam ashore and all of the other men were able to regain the overturned boat and cling to it except Dill and Lehaney, whose bodies were not recovered. The endangered men were rescued by fishermen. One of the rescuers dove under the overturned craft when it was towed ashore and recovered the woman's body.

Convicted of embezzling trust funds in Davenport five years ago, he had served five of his eleven years. Six years ago Samuel Francis Smith was a highly respected citizen.

SPAIN NOW AT PEACE; AMERICANS ARE SAFE

Minister Says No Visitor Was Injured During Rioting in Barcelona.

FEAR TROUBLE IN THE FUTURE

Officials Take Every Precaution to Prevent Renewal of Outbreak.

Order now has been restored in every province in Spain. Barcelona has been calm for a few days and normal life has been resumed there. Sabadell and Tarrassa have submitted to the troops and the mushroom republics proclaimed in some of the communes faded away as soon as the soldiers made their appearance.

The American minister in Madrid announced on Wednesday that all Americans in Barcelona or in the affected districts during the recent disorders are safe.

The officials at Barcelona are taking every precaution to prevent any outbreak in the future. The terrible repressive measures of the military authorities have left a deep undercurrent of resentment among the masses and fears are still entertained that the rebellion may flare up again in a new form. The people the clamoring for the release of the prisoners in the dungeons of Fort Montjuich.

Denies Murders by Rioters.

Senor Solortega, a Republican Senator, has arrived at Madrid from Barcelona. He denies the recent movement in that city was separatist and says also that the revolutionists during the two days they were masters of the city did not commit a single assassination or act of cruelty. The inmates of the religious institutions fled when the buildings were burned. One of the greatest losses in Barcelona is the libraries of the Christian schools and the Scientific museum, containing together 70,000 volumes. A new civil governor of Barcelona has been appointed.

The minister of the Interior has given out a statement in which he says, among other things, that not only the reservists but volunteers are flocking to the recruiting stations for service in Morocco.

Says Women Attacked Monks.

The Paris Figaro's staff correspondent at Barcelona reports that the rioters violated the sepulcher of nuns, but did not harm living nuns. The monks, however, were chased from convents and monasteries while the women in the crowds, who were especially enraged, cried: "Away with you! No longer will you steal our needle and our broidery; no longer will you prevent by your unfair competition our women finding employment."

Some incidents of the rioting assumed the phase of grewsome buffoonery. In one convent where there was a big stock of candles the women and children lighted these and held a mock procession, and two mummified bodies of nuns arrayed in magnificent raiment were carried with mock pomp before the residence of a millionaire citizen.

TWO KIDNAPED; $25.000 ASKED.

Children of St. Louis Man Held for Ransom Under Death Threat.

Grace Viviano, 5 years old, and Thomas Viviano, 2½ years old, children of a wealthy Italian manufacturer, were kidnapped in St. Louis, and are held for $25,000 ransom. A letter demanding that sum under penalty of injury or death to the children was received by the distracted parents and is now in the hands of the police.

Detectives have been sent through the Italian quarter and five suspects arrested, though no trace of the children could be found. Though nothing in the letter demanding the ransom indicated it, the parents are of the belief that the Black Hand is back of the kidnaping, and, remembering the fate of two Louisiana children kidnapped by agents of the Black Hand Society some time ago, they feel sure their children will be crippled or killed unless the demands of the kidnapers are met or the children taken from them soon.

KILLED AT "DEATH CURVE."

Chicago-Whiting Electric Car Run Down by Suburban Train.

"Death curve," an unguarded crossing on the Hegewisch branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad Lines at 104th street and Indianapolis avenue, Chicago, was the scene of a collision Thursday evening between a Chicago-Whiting electric car and a Pennsylvania suburban train, in which the street car was demolished, the conductor was killed and fifty-three men, women and children were injured, some of them perhaps fatally. The conductor of the electric car, who died three hours later, the motorman and two of the more seriously injured passengers were hurried to the South Chicago hospital, and most of the other passengers are at the Englewood Union and St. Bernard hospitals in Englewood, having been taken there on the same train that wrecked the electric car.

Bolt Kills a Couple in Home.

During a severe electrical storm at Bealeton, Va., Andrew Jones and his wife were struck by lightning and instantly killed as they sat in their home.

TAFT PRAISES PAYNE BILL.

I have signed the Payne tariff bill because I believe it to be the result of sincere effort on the part of the Republican party to make a downward revision and to comply with the promises of the platform as they have been generally understood and as I interpreted them in the campaign before election.

This is not a perfect tariff bill, or a complete compliance with the promises made strictly interpreted, but a fulfillment free from criticism in respect to a subject matter involving many schedules and thousands of articles could not be expected. It suffices to say that, except with regard to whisky, liquors and wines, and in regard to silks and as to some high classes of cottons—all of which may be treated as luxuries and proper subjects of a revenue tariff—there have been very few increases in rates.

There have been a great number of real decreases in rates, and they constitute a sufficient amount to justify the statement that this bill is a substantial downward revision and a reduction of excessive rates. This is not a free trade bill. It was not intended to be. The Republican party did not promise to make a free trade bill.

The Philippine tariff section I have struggled to secure for ten years past, and it gratifies me exceedingly by my signature to give it the effect of law. I am sure it will greatly increase the trade between the two countries, and it will do much to build up the Philippines in a healthful prosperity.

The corporation tax is a just and equitable excise measure, which, it is hoped, will produce a sufficient amount to prevent a deficit and which incidentally will secure valuable statistics and information concerning the many corporations of the country, and will constitute an important step toward that degree of publicity and regulation which the tendency in corporate enterprises in the last twenty years has shown to be necessary.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Milton H. Clark, a prominent horseman, formerly president of the Lake Erie and Mohawk Valley circuit, is dead.

Toboggan, Pat Ornus and Arvid Ladd were killed and a score of crack horses were injured by a fire which destroyed fifty-five stalls at the driving park at Tursa, Okla.

Not one of the American horses that were among the starters in the events at Sandoun Park, England, were winners. H. P. Whitney, J. R. Keene and Richard Croker were represented in the entries.

At the Canadian Athletic championship meet at Winnipeg, George H. Goulding, of Toronto, clipped nearly a second off the world's best mark. His record for the mile walk is 6 minutes and 25 1-5 seconds.

There is a scarcity of good steeplechase horses throughout the country, and it is the exception to find new, promising steeds. The races are filled with old "has-beens," and others on the verge of breaking down. The fields are of goodly size, as a rule, in Canada, but there are no new horses, and the same old names which have been familiar for years are still doing duty.

The Wisconsin Union of Sharpshooters' Societies will hold a State telegraph shoot in September under the direction of the general committee of Wausau. Wausau, Chilton, New Holstein, La Crosse, Monroe, Monticello, Milwaukee, and New Glarus will be represented in the contest.

President Defends Measure as Fulfillment of His Pre-Election Pledges.

President Taft signed the Payne tariff bill at 5:06 Thursday evening in the President's room at the capitol in Washington, surrounded by cabinet officials, Senators and representatives who had gathered to witness the simple ceremony.

Within an hour thereafter, or at 6 o'clock, the Senate having adopted the conference report by a vote of 47 to 31, and both houses having adopted the concurrent resolution to correct the errors in the leather schedule, the special session of Congress adjourned without day. For good or ill, the revised tariff is before the people. The new law became operative at midnight.

Thursday night the President gave a farewell dinner at the White House to the leaders of both houses of Congress. Friday evening he departed for the summer capital at Beverly.

The passage of the bill was witnessed by crowded galleries. House members filled the rear of the Senate chamber. Prominent among the latter was Sereno E. Payne, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, whose name the bill will carry as its author.

Immediately after his return to the White House from the capitol, where he had gone to sign the Payne bill and also the Philippine tariff and the deficiency appropriation bills, President Taft issued a statement to the country. It is a defense of the new tariff law with respect to meeting party pledges, and the President's campaign interpretation of the platform. The President does not seek to declare the bill perfect, but in the main he regards it as having wrought substantial downward revision.

RECORD CROPS IN NORTHWEST.

Wheat and Corn Break All Records in Minnesota and Dakotas.

The Northwest has raised a great crop of grains this year. Harvest is at hand and the cutting of grain is general in Minnesota and South Dakota, and is crowding into North Dakota. The record will be broken as to wheat and corn, and probably oats and flax, while barley will hold its own and may prove to be a record crop also. It will require $375,000,000 to $400,000,000 to purchase these crops at present prices. No other statement is necessary to emphasize the prosperity that has come once more to the people of the Northwest.

FAMOUS "BLUE LAWS" KILLED

Liberal Views Defeat 1722 Statute—Sunday Baseball Now Possible.

Both houses of the Connecticut Legislature Wednesday passed a bill repealing the so-called "blue laws" relating to Sunday observance, which forbid almost every form of recreation and secular activity. The laws, which have been seldom enforced, are relics of 1722. One law specifically repealed provides for a fine of $4 on each person who shall attend a concert or entertainment on the Lord's day. The new Sunday bill is short. It defines the Sunday and prohibits all sports and secular activities "except such as are demanded by necessity and mercy, and such as are for the general welfare of the community." The penal section provides both fines and imprisonment for violation. Under the words "general welfare of the community" Sunday baseball is probably permitted, and the advocates of the bill admit that the courts must interpret the wording in several places.

United States Senator G. H. Clay, of Georgia, has been re-elected by the Georgia Legislature. His term will expire in 1915.

President Taft's faith in the corporation tax measure is unshaken. He will accept no substitute for the measure and will not modify it.

The women suffragists of Colorado are to make an effort to send one of their own sex to Congress two years hence. They are agreed that Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker is to be the candidate.

The Democratic congressional committee, one year in advance of the usual time for such action, has elected officers and mapped out the course for capturing the House in the next congressional elections.

Speaker Cannon has decided that if he threw down all the insurgents in the matter of committee assignments it would have the effect of reviving the opposition to Cannonism and the House rules. For that reason the heads of two or three of the insurgent leaders will be laid on the blocks, while the others will be permitted to retain the assignments they held in the former Congress.

Congressman Ashbrook of Ohio has started the Democratic campaign of 1912 by asserting that a canvass of the Democrats in Congress shows a practically unanimous choice among them of Gov. Harmon of Ohio as the next candidate of the party for President.

President Taft has served notice on the congressional leaders of the Republican party that the country is looking to see that the pledges made last fall are kept for a downward revision of the tariff. The President's position is that, so far as within his power, he will see that the pledges are kept.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The sustained improvement in business is emphasized by a high aggregate of payments through the banks, smaller trading defaults, and widening demands upon productive capacity and transportation facilities. Tariff revision as an accomplished fact removes some uncertainties and the way is made easier to decide upon new projects. Iron and steel conditions have entered upon a most encouraging outlook, and the success of that industry imparts strength to many other industrial branches.

Factory outputs begin to approach the best previous records. The aggregate of new demands for finished products assures increasing employment of facilities and labor, although the subject of adequate profits may for a time cause some hesitancy in commitments. Movements of commodities are seen to be steadily expanding and high temperatures cause widespread supplementary buying in the leading retail lines here and at the interior.

An expected advance in some costs has brought increased activity in wholesale lines of general merchandise, the attendance of visiting merchants being far above the numbers usual at this season. Crop reports remain uniformly good, particularly as to corn, and this prospect of an unprecedented addition to the purchasing power is construed as favorable to capital investment and renewed enterprise in commercial channels. Freight movements both east and west now draw more exhaustively upon available equipment, and grain marketings are exceptionally large and promise to continue so for months.

Bank clearings, $257,815,620, exceed these of the corresponding week in 1908 by 21.2 per cent.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 22, against 29 last week, 21 in 1908 and 24 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 6, against 4 last week, 4 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

With the advent of August the new tariff has become an accomplished fact, the leading crops are assuming more tangible form with some tempering of earlier exuberant estimates of yield; high premiums on old supplies of farm products are disappearing and the usual fall buyers' excursions are bringing purchasers to leading markets. There is also noted this year what was absent for two preceding years—a growing scarcity of labor.

On the other hand, there are some features of the trade and the industrial situation not as yet clearly defined. High raw material cost makes for caution in placing orders in some lines of cotton goods and the advance in the prices of some lines of finished iron and steel is claimed to have discouraged some new business.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Aug. 5 were 184, against 223 last week, 205 in the like week of 1908, 157 in 1907, 137 in 1906 and 166 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 27, which compares with 34 last week and 19 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

VOTERS BEAT TOM JOHNSON.

Cleveland Mayor's 3 Cent Carfare Grant Beaten in Referendum.

Mayor Tom L. Johnson on Tuesday received the most severe defeat of his career in Cleveland when the Schmidt street railway grant was turned down at the referendum election by a majority of 3,763 votes after a campaign which has been the most bitter of recent years. The vote stood: For the grant, 31,022; against, 34,785.

The Schmidt grant provided for a 3 cent fare line on Payne avenue for a distance of two and one-half miles and was intended as the basis of a system that would absorb all the franchises of the Cleveland railway company as they expired next January, and force a settlement of the eight years' fight on terms to suit Johnson.

With the defeat of the Schmidt grant, the alternative evidently desired by the public is the so-called

TOM L. JOHNSON.

Taylor plan, suggested by Federal Judge Taylor, which provides that new grants shall be made to the Cleveland Railway Company on the basis of an income of 6 per cent to the stockholders at a fair valuation, the fare to be as low as this income will allow with good service on all lines.

Mayor Johnson early admitted his defeat and stated that the fight would go on even though he is beaten at the mayoralty election in the fall. What move he will make next has not been announced.

SLAYERS OF PETROSINO TRACED

Two Men Now Under Arrest at Columbus in Italy at Time.

Inspector Oldfield in his report to the Postmaster General states that Antonio Marrfesi and Cologero Vicario, both of Dennison, O., who are in jail at Columbus awaiting action by the grand jury, were in Sicily at the time of the murder of Lieut. Petrosino, the New York detective. He says they returned to the United States after the assassination and furnished the theory that if the New York police should cooperate with the postal inspectors it is possible that connection can be traced between them and the society of the "Blackhanders" who are believed to have murdered the New York police lieutenant.

Nineteen money orders, each for $1,000, and one for $80 have been traced to Italy for the fund to protect from justice the slayers of Petrosino. The money was sent by Camilla Nunzieogi Lima, who is supposed to be either the sister or wife of Salvatore, the head of the organized society at Marion, O.

Stephen Eiser Shoots Two Because Mrs. Eiser Deserted Him.

Stephen Eiser, of Steelton, Pa., shot and killed his brother-in-law, George Goritz, and his sister-in-law, Katherine Goritz, as the couple were about to enter the rooming house where they lived at 11504 Front street, South Chicago. He then turned the pistol on himself with fatal effect. Foritz was 32, his wife 28 and the slayer 42. Eiser was angry at Goritz and his wife because they sheltered Mrs. Eiser when she left her husband. Eiser and Goritz married sisters and lived in Steelton until two months ago, when Goritz and his wife came to South Chicago. Mrs. Goritz urged Mrs. Eiser to come and live with them, and this she did until a few days ago, when she got work as a domestic. Mrs. Eiser is said to have fled from her home because her husband was cruel. He followed her.

GETS CASH; KILLED BY POSSE.

Bandit Robs Cashier at White Bear, Minn.—Two Dead in Battle Later.

An unidentified man entered the First State Bank in White Bear, Minn., Thursday and, pointing a revolver at the head of Cashier Alfred Auger, demanded that all the money in the bank be handed over. There was only $600 on hand, which Auger gave up. The robber then backed out of the door and fled. In a short time half the population of the village, armed with shotguns and other weapons, was on the trail of the bandit. The robber was run to cover and a fight followed in which two men were killed. It is reported that the robber, whose name was Robert Kohl, and a boy named Nathan Lammers, were killed. Several others were wounded.

Hog Cholera Cure Is Found.

J. H. Mercer, government live stock sanitary inspector, is proving the efficiency of serum treatment of hogs for cholera prevention. He is making tests at the Kansas City stock yards and has given the serum and anti-cholera treatment to animals which are alive and well, notwithstanding they were kept in the same pen with hogs that were given cholera virus and afterward died.

"I am quite ready to go whenever you think best," was her composed answer.

"I certainly think that if he shows any anxiety for my presence it is only right, as well as wise, to gratify it. But what about shopping, and such like? I see you are ready to go out now."

"Oh, they are all small matters that can be settled to-day. I have to replace some things that were marked with my monogram or initials. Do you think that it would seem at all remarkable if I were to turn up 'la bas,' with a brilliantly new dressing-bag and writing-case? Mine have my monogram on everything."

"Of course not. How stupid in me not to think of it. Come with me to Drew's now, and let me get you a bag."

She flushed a bit. "No, indeed, I did not mean that. I have plenty of money with me, and am going to amuse myself wasting some of it all by myself. I dare say that you could get me a cheque cashed in the office if I wanted it."

"Oh, certainly," he agreed, dryly, then asked: "I suppose you are not getting any supply of new clothes?"

"No, my mourning outfit is still new, and I should think, under the circumstances, all that is necessary?"

"Quite so," he agreed, rather absently, strolling to the window. "May I have a spray of mignonette for my buttonhole,"

"Certainly, if it's mine to give. It's very nice having all these flowers about. I was thinking this morning that I had never seen them put about a hotel room before."

"Oh, I told them yesterday to send some in. I thought we needed a few after the St. Lawrence."

His tone was of the dryest, and his back was turned, so that he could not see the shy flush on her face.

"It was very nice in you to think of it," she murmured, softly.

"Well, I must be off to my solicitor's," he remarked, and with an uncomfortable impression that she was ungracious, she assented: "Yes, perhaps we shall get more done each on our own hook."

"How sharp and disagreeable I am growing! It will soon show itself in my mouth and chin," she thought, bitterly, as she settled herself in her hansom.

Perhaps it was some such sentiment of compunction that made her give him so gracious a greeting when he reappeared about dusk.

"You look tired," she said. "Come and sit by the fire and have some tea."

"And you look very 'comfy,'" he said, cheerily, as he settled himself down. "A contrast indeed to the dismal, muddy streets. Still, even if dark and muddy, 'they are town. They are all that ever went with evening dress,' and it will take a good dose of civilization yet before I tire of it."

"Then you are not homesick for the prairies?" she asked, and having asked it, looked as though she felt the question too personal. He did not seem to take it so, though.

"No more prairies for me! To-morrow it will be the old Orkwell woods and lanes. You will like the place, I know." And then he went on to tell her more than he had yet done of his boyhood's surroundings and associations.

That night they went again to the theater, doing so being apparently the easiest solution of the problem of how to spend the evening in each other's society. They were just leaving the house with the crowd when Mathilde said with a start: "Oh, that is Captain Kerr."

It was he, there was no doubt of it, coming towards them, and the central exit.

That he saw them also was certain, for the expression of his face changed from the self-absorption of solitude in a crowd into one of intense astonishment, merging into indignant contempt.

For a moment Mathilde felt his gaze resting upon her in judgment, with no sign or word of recognition, then, abruptly wedging himself into the crowd in front, he was lost to sight.

They turned a glance of silent question to each other, then Stewart muttered, fiercely:

"Well, of all the impudence! Here, I must go after him!" And he would have dropped her arm if she had not held his the tighter.

"Would you make me the subject of a street brawl?" she said in a low, intense voice.

This checked he busied himself in silence, getting her into a cab, and in silence they drove through the noisy streets.

It was not until they stood in the hotel corridor that she spoke with a laugh.

"I think that I shall go to bed, and digest at my leisure the pleasant opinion which our friend has formed of me."

"Before God, he has no right to it! On my honor, he knows the true facts."

The outward signs of wrath were gone, but Stewart's face was set in steady lines, and there was a proud ring in his carefully modulated voice.

Mathilde was unheeding, though.

"Then he evidently doesn't like them," she retorted with a bitter laugh, as she turned to go upstairs.

CHAPTER IX.

Whatever the keen suffering of the night hours, when Mathilde realized what was an honest man's opinion of the position in which she had placed herself, it was with much the same manner as usual that she met Stewart the next morning. The question of Captain Kerr was not reopened.

Both were busy—he, out of doors; she, in; and it was hurriedly at the last that they left the hotel at 11 o'clock.

Mathilde's heart rather sank, as she found that they had a carriage to themselves, but as Stewart had laid in an abundant supply of papers and proceeded to immerse himself in them, she willingly followed suit.

Silently they sped westward, through the quiet English landscape, lying in varying tints of browns and tawny yellows, and even riverside bits of green, under the luminous gray of the wintry sky.

Mathilde's paper had dropped, and her thoughts were in the fleeting winter landscape. So absorbed was she that her husband's voice startled her.

"Thinking of the difference between this and that frozen white wilderness along the C. P. R. route? After all, the old country is not such a bad place, is it?" It was just what she had been thinking, with all an artist's appreciation of the soft half-tones of winter; but she was in no mood to admit it.

"I love those white winter stretches, with the bright sky above them," she answered, coldly.

"They have a beauty of their own," he agreed. Then, as though suddenly resolving to recognize and face her attitude:

"Look here. There is no use in ignoring that affair last night. I can see how much you minded it."

"I hardly see that there is anything to be said about it. The man showed plainly enough what he thought of me. That is all."

Her voice was full of weary bitterness. He flung aside his paper, and leaned forward towards her from his opposite corner.

"It's not all by any means. What earthly right had he to assume that air of outraged virtue? If he didn't approve of our going to the theater together as friends, he might have made a guess that we were married."

"Perhaps he did, and thought no better of us for it," she said, in the same tone as before.

"Why on earth should he not?" he asked, staring at her in amazement, not unmixed with anger.

She, too, showed more warmth.

"I suppose he looks on me as a woman who has not scrupled to take the legal place which before God belonged to another woman."

"That is rather far-fetched to be a man's view of the matter," Stewart said, with an angry laugh; then he asked sternly: "Is that what you feel?"

"Hardly, or I should not be here."

The answer was prompt and proud, and his eyes softened at it, though he spoke as determinately as before.

"Whatever opinion he may have evolved from his inner store of self-righteousness, there is only one course open to me—that is to write and inform him of our marriage, and also of the fact that we have no desire for his further acquaintance."

Mrs. Stewart looked, as she felt, surprised, and said:

"But that might lead to something which would upset the whole scheme."

"Hardly that. There is no necessity to give him any address. But even if it were to spoil the whole thing, we cannot leave him in any doubt as to your position."

A glow of kindliness softened her face with its warmth and light.

She was ashamed at the remembrance of the bitter thoughts of the night watches, when she had judged this man as careless of her honor and his own.

"And it is no such great risk," he went on. "He is not at all likely to run up against any of the Orkwell people, or even to see us again for some time to come."

"All the same, it is very good in you to risk it," she said, gently.

An unmistakable air of gratification responded to her more gracious attitude, though he only muttered in an abrupt fashion: "Not at all, not at all."

There was silence for a few moments, and then Stewart began again with an evident effort.

"There is one thing I want to say before we get there. You must remember that if the whole scheme should get blown upon, it wouldn't be such a dreadful tragedy after all.

"Say that the facts came out, and under Flora's influence, my father turned crusty; well, I am a fairly prosperous man in the Northwest, and on my father's death I could always let the place, and get a big rent for the shooting. I believe, though, that a very few years more of hard work out there, with the Orkwell rent to invest, would enable me to live on the place. Would two or three years as a settler's wife be a very hard ordeal?"

There was a certain wistfulness in his voice which she might have detected, if it had not been for the swift vision that came over her of that house on the prairie, haunted by that other woman's sorrow, and with that little white cross on the slope against the sky.

It was not the dread of long, solitary, winter days, but the shadow of Stewart's past, that sent an involuntary shudder over her, though, he, keen to notice it, put it down to the dread of such hardship.

She laughed dryly: "We should look rather silly with such a marriage manque on our hands."

"It need not necessarily be that," he said, in rather an indistinct voice, with his head turned to stare out of the window.

She thought that she had caught those words, but she could not be quite sure, and, puzzled and uncertain, remained silent.

They had lunched, they had finished their papers, and chatted by fits and starts, before, in the early afternoon hours, Stewart began to recognize with growing interest the landmarks as they passed.

At last he said: "Ours is the next station. There is the beginning of Orkwell woods. By heavens, that woman shan't drive me out from the old place without a fight for it!" With such warlike sentiment, he made ready to alight.

There was an evident air of excitement on the platform among the small, scattered groups of farmer folk and village worthies, and Mrs. Stewart, looking on, saw her husband, flushed and smiling and visibly touched, as a hearty cheer received him, and he exchanged vigorous handshakes with his old friends.

The old coachman on the box of the carriage was surreptitiously rubbing his eyes, and the footman could do nothing but grin helplessly.

"After all, there is something worth coming home to," Stewart said, as the carriage door shut on them.

A long drive throdugh upland meadows and sloping beechwoods; a village street where the women and children stood at the doors in their Sunday clothes, and dipped and curtsied; a sharp turn into big gates past a lodge, and an overarched avenue curving up before them.

"There is the house," Stewart said.

Throughout the drive he had taken several side-glances at his wife, but if he were looking for signs of nervousness he found none.

As the carriage swept up the slope to the great entrance door, Stewart spoke a few words which fairly took away her breath.

"By Jove!" he said, suddenly, as if under some uncontrollable impulse, "no one can look at you and say that I have not brought the right mistress for such a home."

She stared, and then laughed outright; but before she could think of any answer the carriage had drawn up, the massive hall doors were flung open, and the gray-haired butler was on the steps.

It was thus, with her beauty heightened by the glow brought by her husband's admiration, that she entered her future home.

She felt, rather than saw, the stately proportions of the great hall, for Stewart had called her attention to the agitated old man, and she was just giving him a kindly greeting when her keenly alert senses were aware of the opening of a door, and through that door she saw advancing a woman's tall, slim figure in an elaboration of widow's weeds.

"James," she said, quickly, to attract Stewart's attention, and then bethought herself that it was the first time she had called her husband by his Christian name.

A remembrance of curiously searching, pale, prominent eyes, of a flabby handgrasp, and a flabby peck at her cheek, were what Mathilde always recalled of her first meeting with her sister-in-law. The soft, sugary voice in which she spoke did not altogether match the coldly searching eyes.

"I meant to be at the door to greet you, but I never heard the carriage drive up. You poor dear; you must be half frozen. Come in to the library fire." And she led Mathilde in with the grasp which, though flabby, was yet tenacious, and drew her to an arm-chair.

"How good in you to bring me a sister at last, James! You must have known how lonely I was," and she sighed with effusion, still patting Mathilde's hand.

"Well, I am afraid that in doing so I had only selfish motives in view," he retorted rather grimly, and the remark had such an unseen double meaning that Mathilde could not refrain from laughing helplessly. Mrs. Herbert looked a bit discomfited, and said rather feebly, "Oh, yes, I suppose so."

Stewart broke the pause by asking gravely: "How is my father?"

"Not very well, poor dear, to-day. I suppose it is the excitement of expecting you. Shall we send and see if he would like you to go to him now?" she asked.

"I will ring," he answered shortly, and as the butler appeared he spoke at once, forestalling Mrs. Herbert, to her ill-concealed annoyance.

"Ask Sir James if I shall come to him now," he directed, and the old man answered with a tremulous attempt at formality:

"Sir James' man has just come to say that he would like to see you at once, sir."

"Very well;" and he was leaving the room, when the irrepressible soft, purring voice was heard:

"But is not your wife going, too?"

"I will go alone now, thank you, and will take Mathilde later," Stewart answered gravely, and his wife saw that he was pale, as though regretting some natural feeling at the coming interview.

THE PROGRESSIVE FARMER.

John Dole and Margaret his wife had been married about four months when they decided, although it was in the dead of winter, that they could no longer be happy unless they grew a garden in the little plot of earth that "came with the house," as John expressed it. Seed catalogues and brilliantly colored pamphlets on the landscape architecture of garden and lawns were henceforth the literature of the moment.

Margaret sat at the table, pencil in hand, ready to put down what John should select. He sat by the fire, with a lap full of papers and books.

"Now there tomatoes," he said. "Put down tomatoes, No. 9827. Gracious, but they're fine ones! Here's one that's bigger than a whole man."

"What!" exclaimed Margaret. "Let's see."

"No, it is not, either," said John, after a moment's pause. "I made a mistake, or rather the artist did. The picture is just mixed up. But it's a whopper, anyway. We won't have much room for 'em, but we'd better have, say, ten dozen. We can make preserves, you know."

"That seems a good many," said Margaret, "but we'll ask my father to go over the list for us when we get it none. What else?"

"Well, put down potatoes," said John; "they're always useful. And string beans, and peas, and some squash—summer and fall—and then we must have some green corn, and lettuce and parsley, and——"

"But, Jack, we can't get all those in; and besides, you'd never have time to weed them out. It says in that green book that a garden is no good unless it is weeded carefully. Weeds 'sap the vitality of the plants,' remember."

"Oh, I know that," said John, loftily, "and I realize that I sha'n't have much time to weed the garden. But——"

"I sha'n't weed, I can tell you now," said Margaret. "I have enough to do with——"

"Just you listen," said John. "I've got a scheme that'll save both of us. I wonder no one ever thought of it before. It's so simple. I told Howard the other day, and he seemed much interested."

"What is it?"

"Well, I propose to buy a lot of burlap—just plain, ordinary burlap at about 3 cents a yard, you know—and nail it on to the ground round the plants. In that way, you see, the weeds can't possibly grow up, and there won't be any work for us to do, except to pick and eat the vegetables."

"O Jack," exclaimed the girl, "that's fine! It's so simple, too, like all great inventions! What did Howard say? He has a garden, you know."

"Howard didn't say much," replied John, "but he listened carefully, and asked about some of the details. He said he had heard of a man who bought a lot of linoleum, which is water-proof, and cut it out to fit the stems of each plant, leaving about a quarter of an inch for growing space. Of course," John added, reflectively, "linoleum is more expensive than burlap, but then——"

"How did that man's plants come out?" asked Margaret, the practical.

"Howard didn't say," remarked John, thoughtfully.—Youth's Companion.

WOMEN AND FASHION

Entertaining Quietly.

"These people who entertain all the time in a cheap way make me sick," said a young housekeeper discussing an inexpensive puzzle party a friend had given. "How much smarter Margery's affairs would be if she gave one stunning lunch or dinner a season? It would save her lots of trouble, too."

Ideas like these are the deathblow to hospitality and sociability. Women who cannot give handsome dinners and luncheons give nothing. They limit their entertaining and are burdened by a weight of unpaid social obligations because they cannot have as fine linen or china as wealthier friends.

The power to entertain handsomely is enviable; even more to be envied is the gift of entertaining charmingly but simply. Girls at home and young married women who possess this knack are never lacking in popularity. It is a pleasant thing to welcome one's friends, but when their coming means a splurge that can be ill-afforded entertaining misses its purpose.

We need to get back to the simpler ways when having a few guests to dinner did not mean a caterer, several extra waiters and swelled bills. There are brides who pine to show off their dainty gifts of silver and china, who yet keep their pretty things packed away waiting for the time when they can give a costly enough meal to be in keeping. How more than foolish! There are many ways in which young people can entertain at little cost. Eliminate expensive refreshments and costly prizes. These are the things that run into money. What is needed is courage not to do as the rest of your set does.

To Freshen Flowers.

If cut flowers from the florist's or garden are placed as soon as possible in cold water in which a little mild soap has been dissolved, making suds, they will keep fresh much longer than usual, and will even freshen up wonderfully if they have already drooped. Also, if one wishes to keep roses in bud for some time, a soft thread should be tied snugly around the bud, and when ready for use, even though several days after picking, the rose will be found as snug a bud as when first tied up, and, moreover, will not shatter as soon as ordinarily.—Woman's Home Companion.

To Decrease Height.

When standing or walking the effect of tallness may be decreased by a slight droop of the head. To allow the head to hang is extreme and accomplishes nothing beyond an unpleasant appearance, while the tiniest droop can do wonders. There should be no stooping of the shoulders, however, for this will ruin the figure and make the girl most awkward. She should hold herself erect, though not stiffly so. Marvels may be done in taking off inches by the manner of hair dressing.

Law of Attraction.

The attractions of men to women and women to men are full of the most perplexing inconstancies and contradictions imaginable. It is, for instance, a physical law that magnetism is not simple attraction of one thing for another, but the difference of two opposing forces of attraction and repulsion, of which the former is the greater. The same law holds in relation to the attraction of men and women for each other.

Stylish Foulard Gown.

Dotted wistaria satin foulard was used to make the gown from which this model was sketched. Plain satin-covered buttons are elaborately used for decoration, and the Empire waist line is defined by a band of velvet (several shades darker than ground of material) attached in front at bust line by two huge amethyst buttons. Chemisette and stock are white Irish crochet lace.

How to Open a Book.

Hold the book with its back on a smooth or covered table; let the front board down, then the other, holding the leaves at the back, then a few at the front, and so on, alternately opening the back and front, gently pressing open the sections till you reach the center of the volume. Do this two or three times and you will obtain the best results. Open the volume violently or carelessly in any one place and you will likely break the back and cause a start in the leaves. Never force the back of the book.

CREPE RADIUM.

A handsome afternoon or luncheon gown of crushed grape crepe radium made with tunic front and long train. The double row of braiding down each side and across bottom of tunic is done in dark grape soutache. The round chemisette and stock of tucked white silk mousseline is outlined by a wide band of self-tone passementerie. Double bands of same trim the bottom of tucked front bodice, just above the unique girdle of Empire waist.

Should Train Their Nerves.

We hear women talk of "nerves! nerves!" as though they looked upon them as their greatest foes. All the physical pleasures of life are brought to us through our nerves, and even the higher joys of the intellectual and the spiritual life we become aware of only through the medium of feeling, and for this reason alone it behooves one to keep one's nerves in a normal, healthful and responsive condition.

The fact that the nervous system is amenable to training and that its habits can be unerringly cultivated at one's own will, and under one's own direction, or with outside assistance is necessary, is a fact of growing importance. This is so because the recent work of scientific men is showing us to what a minute degree nerve habits can be controlled and also because especially in America, our climate and our modern civilization are making greater demands upon nervous force and contribute to the unconscious formation of detrimental nervous habits.

The time has come, prophesied by Mr. Gilman's "neolithic man":

We're going to wear great piles of stuff
Outside our natural skins,
We're going to have diseases
And accomplishments and sins.

Worry, ill temper, haste, laziness, overwork, selfishness, egotism and distrust are in many cases bad habits of the nerves.—Anna Sturges Duryea in the Delineator.

Women Who Do Things.

Miss Anna Pritchett, of Louisville, only 24 years old, is professor of economics at Wellesley College. Miss Margaret Ashton, sister-in-law of Ambassador Bryce, has been elected to the town council of her native place in England. Miss Zella Nuttall, of Chicago, is field director of the Reid-Crocker expedition in Mexico. Mme. Louise Blano and Mme. Jeanne Menard are regular ship physicians on two of the largest Mediterranean steamships.

Beauty's Mar.

The forehead filled with lines is not always a sign of years. Often it is nothing but evidence of bad facial habits. Do you knit your eyebrows when you are thinking of perplexing matters or are down on your luck? If you do you will have a forehead seamed with lines and several deep furrows between the eyes

A Sad Disappointment.

Mrs. Gould gets $36,000 a year alimony, and she insisted on the stand than no lady in her position could dress becomingly on less than $40,000 a year. So she's short $4,000 a year alone, not to speak of hotel, carriage and touring expenses. Evidently this unhappy woman is doomed to a life of self-denial. What she wanted was $250,000 a year.

Hot Search for a Shovel.

"Lady, I'm de gent you hired ter clean your snow off last winter!"

"But, my dear man, it's summer now, and the snow is all gone."

"I know, lady; but it's took me all dis time ter borrow a shovel."

Poetry, Prose and Truth.

"If I should die, and at my death some friend should come and stand above me—should whisper with his sobbing breath how very much he's come to love me—if he should weep and wring his hands and wail that I had acted fairly—should say that ever from the stands he's boosted me for doing squarely; if he should say that I was right in giving out some close decision against the home team in a fight where he had never cursed my vision; if he should whisper in his grief, 'Old boy, I know that you were straight—I never called you a lop-eared thief nor swore you were a pirate's mate; I never clamored for a rope you'd go where snowballs vanish quickly; I cheered each time you acted well, as thou you were a human being—nor daily gave you merry h— for accidents beyond my seeing; I always thought you did your best, and so no side advice I proffered—I think you fairly met the test whenever the occasion offered.' If these were but the words he said, I'd rise up in my white cravat—it were not enough to wake the dead to get a sudden shock like that—I'd rise up in my coat of white and look around a bit, and then, if I found that I'd heard aright, I'd drop back dead again."—Grantland Rice.

The Rev. Mr. Willoughby, pastor of the First Christian Church in Fortville, is seriously ill from tetanus, caused by running a rusty nail in his foot three weeks ago. The wound had healed, and all danger was thought to be over, until last week, while in the pulpit, he lost control of the facial expression, and has been growing worse ever since.

A charivari party at Greenfield went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Jeffries, who were recently married, and placed them in a cage arrangement, in which they were hauled through the streets and taken to New's roof garden. The cage was duly placarded and was followed by their friends and two or three hundred attracted by the novel procession.

Efforts of the Wayne County Fish and Game Association to put a stop to alleged depredations committed by dynamiters along the county's bass streams, has begun in earnest. Earl Doddridge, of Washington Township, has been charged with dynamiting fish. Prosecutor Ladd said that several other young men were implicated. Doddridge has been released under a $3,000 bond.

William Lawson, aged 75 years, a wealthy farmer of Anderson, who two months ago got a divorce from his fifth wife, has eloped with his housekeeper, Mrs. Carrie Sutton, aged 31 years, to St. Louis, where they were married. Mrs. Sutton came from Knoxville, Tenn., a year ago. Lawson buried four wives before he met his fifth and sixth. He has several sons, all well-to-do farmers.

Suffering from the hallucination that he is a candidate for Mayor, W. L. Clement, 50 years old, escaped from his home at 1923 Holloway avenue, Indianapolis, and the police have been asked to look for him. They have been watching carefully, but he evaded them.

W. B. Barefoot & Co., a poultry firm of Cambridge City, has in the last six months paid to farmers for chickens, eggs and butter $223,000. Poultry was by far the heaviest part of the business. The Barefoots this season paid the highest price for chickens ever known in the county. They made weekly shipments to New York. Spring chickens have been in active demand at 17c to 20c, until this week, when heavy receipts caused a decline to 14c.

A Brown County rattlesnake is proving the central attraction at Greenwood. The snake was captured by William Watson, formerly of Greenwood, who found it near Bear Wallow and brought it to Greenwood. The snake is more than four feet long and is six inches in circumference. It has twelve rattles and a button, indicating that it is thirteen years old. Mr. Watson said he extracted its fangs, and the people here are willing to take his word for it without examination.

Headache powders are said to have caused the death of Mrs. Mollie Riley, wife of Charles R. Riley, of Middletown. Mrs. Riley was found dead in her bed. She was subject to severe attacks of headache and especially for the last week had she suffered intensely. On this account she was a constant user of headache powders, and these are believed to have caused her death. Coroner Hiatt went to Middletown to investigate the death and is inclined to this opinion. Mrs. Riley was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lanyan, of Greenfield, and is survived by her husband and two children, ages 6 and 9 years.

Two Richmond families are doing their full duty toward swelling the population of Wayne County. Mrs. John Liscomb has just given birth to her nineteenth child. She is 49 years old and her husband is 56. Mrs. Wallace Williams, only 23, has just become the mother of her tenth child.

Shelbyville people living in Franklin avenue, between Elliott and Habig streets, two short blocks, believe that many children are a blessing. Within these two squares, on both sides of the street, there are 105 children by actual count. One family consists of twelve children and two doors from this house is a family of father, mother and their eight children.

Catfish, weighing from five to thirty pounds, are being shown in the streets of Columbus nearly every day, and fish markets are selling "home grown" fish almost exclusively. Chas. Haveron, who lives near Columbus, brought a forty-one-pound shovel head catfish to the city and sold it to a local dealer. This fish was caught in the White river below Columbus. The fish was cut into steaks and sold, and it was so large that the bones had to be cut with a saw.

Miss Mary Carmany, 76 years old, for thirty years a teacher of music in the Pennsylvania Asylum for the Blind died at the Madison County Poor Infirmary, where she had been an inmate by choice for 11 years past. She was blind from nine months of age. After leaving the Pennsylvania Blind School and growing feeble Miss Carmany expressed preference to being a ward of the county rather than be supported by relatives. Her brother, William Carmany, a prosperous resident of Ovid, near Anderson, provided for the burial of his sister in Ovid cemetery.

Bloomington citizens witnessed a pathetic sight a few days ago, when Edward Batterton, at one time a prosperous citizen, was taken to the County Poor Farm. The man, now past 80 years, has for years eked out a miserable existence, constantly scorning assistance and refusing to be sent to the public farm. He made a fight that could not be overcome by Rolla Walker, trustee, who was forced to call Ed Johns, chief of the police force, to help get the old man to the county farm. Mr. Batterton was at one time the leading saddle and harness maker in Bloomington.

George Bush, manager of the skating rink at Spencer Park, and Walter McCrea, a farmer, living north of Logansport, tell two stories which doubtless may class as nature fakes, but which are said to be true. McCrea says two robins on his farm were raised by a foster mother. The mother of the robins was killed a few days after they were born and the cock robin went away for half a day and then returned with another female. The newcomer hopped on the nest and raised the little ones as tenderly and as faithfully as the mother would have. Bush says he has a rooster that will not roost any place but on the horns of a billy goat which he owns. And, according to him, the goat is not happy until the rooster is perched there. Effort to dislodge the rooster from his perch is resented by the goat, who advances threateningly on the disturber. All during the day the rooster and the goat chum around together.

The application of John Middlemans, John R. Moffeett, James E. Conley, W. F. Yeagerline and B. J. Bennett to organize the First National Bank of Clay City, with a capital of $25,000, has been approved.

Otto Boyce, of Streator, Ill., caught a carp in the Kankakee river, near Jerrys Island, that weighed 27½ pounds when dressed. On cutting the fish open there were found two large fish hooks, a foot of line with a leaden sinker, and two young pickerel and three young bass, averaging three inches in length.

BUTLER, INDIANA, FRIDAY, AUG. 13, 1909

SPEECH OF HON. CYRUS CLINE

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (S. J. R 40) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

MR. CLINE said:

MR. SPEAKER: I shall vote for the submission of the income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution because I have always believed it to be one of the most equitable and just systems of taxation. In doing so, however, I incorporate with my vote my understanding of the present conditions surrounding the disposal of this measure. I very much believe the leaders of the republican party in congress are not sincere, and do not really want to amend the constitution so that an income tax can be laid without doubt of its constitutionality.

Some of the most influential men in congress, now asking that the proposed amendment be submitted, are known to be unalterably opposed to the imposition of an income tax. In my opion the reason for the enthusiastic support this measure is receiving from leading republicans, both in the senate and the house, is to commit the country and congress to the theory that congress can not now pass a valid income-tax law which the supreme court would uphold as constitutional, if required to pass upon it, and that therefore the amendment is necessary. That assumption would put the entire matter in abeyance for at least three or four years. Then, too, a submission of such an amendment would require three-fourths of the states to ratify it before it could become effective, and if the enemies of the income tax could defeat its ratification in 13 states the entire question would be forever put at rest.

Congress has been in session now four months devising measures to produce revenue to meet the ordinary expense of the government and at the same time protect the interests that have found especial favor at the hands of the republican party and meet the deficit of nearly $100,000,000. During all this time no man has risen in his place and denounced the income tax as an inequitable and unjust measure. No objection has been made to it, except that it was inquisitorial in character and should be applied only in times of great national stress. No man has dared to oppose it because it asks great masses of wealth, in most instances wrung from the people under an iniquitous high-tariff policy that no one subscribed to except the parties who are especially benefitted by that policy, to pay their fair share of taxes

I believe in an income tax because it taxes what a man really has. It taxes wealth, not want; accumulated possessions, instead of consumption. It responds to the ideal democratic doctrine of taxation, viz, that taxes ought to be laid proportionately upon those who are best able to bear them. All taxes are burdensome, and when they are assessed so as to reach those who are best able to bear them they are then correctly apportioned. The very fact that both the house and the senate added a new source of revenue to their respective measures is a confession that the general tariff bill finally framed would not produce sufficient revenue.

The doctrine that congress had the power under the constitution to lay an income tax was the theory and in part the practice of this government for nearly one hundred years. There had been full acquiescence in the constitutional power of congress to enact such legislation. The act of 1861 taxed incomes "derived from any kind of property or from any profession," and that act was amended in 1864 and at various intervals after till 1870. Its constitutionality was not questioned and it was a fruitful source of revenue. The decree of the supreme court of the United States declaring the income-tax law of 1894 unconstitutional surprised and shocked not only the legal fraternity of the land, but the great masses of the people, who had so long believed and acted upon the belief that the law was secure in its constitutional guaranty. That general opinion, with all due respect to the court, is still generally adhered to.

Public thought has naturally turned toward the theory of taxing incomes because of the magnitude of industrial and corporate fortunes that have escaped their share of the burdens. The ratio of investments in real and personal property has materially changed in two decades, the personal holdings being vastly greater than twenty years ago. The public mind, viewing with alarm the increasing power of these vast combinations of wealth and their threatened menace to our full and free enjoyment of our institutions, looked about not only for a remedy to prevent the possible evil influence, but to check the growth of these accumulations, and at the same time reach them for a fair share of the taxes they should justly contribute to their own support and that of the general government.

I was in full accord with our president when he questioned the necessity of a constitutional amendment, as declared in the democratic platform adopted at Denver. The president, in his acceptance of the nomination for the presidesy by the republican party on July 28, 1908, said:

The democratic platform demands two constitutional amendments, one providing for an income tax and the other for the election of the United States senators by the people. In my judgment, amendment to the constitution for an income tax is not necessary.

This was not a conclusion hastily arrived at by the president; he had a year before spoken on this subject. On August 19, 1907, in an address delivered at Columbus, Ohio, he said:

A graduated income tax would have the tendency to reduce the motive for the accumulation of enormous wealth, but the supreme court has held an income tax not to be valid exercise of power by the federal government. The objection to it from a practical standpoint is its inquisitorial character and the premium it puts on perjury. In times of great national need, however, an income tax would be of great assistance in furnishing revenue to carry on the government, and it is not free from doubt how the supreme court, with changed membership, would view a new income tax law under such conditions. The court was nearly evenly divided in the last case, and during the civil war great sums were collected by an income tax without judicial interference and, as it was supposed, under the federal power.

The income-tax law of 1894 was declared unconstitutional by a bare majority of the court, and in the decree all four of the judges dissenting filed opinions. The president, knowing the very narrow margin under which this opinion obtained, the circumstances under which it was rendered, the opinion of eminent judges that the decision was unsound, the changed personnel of the court, believed the question ought again to be submitted for review. So strong was he of the validity of an income-tax law, properly drawn, that he did not hesitate to say that the question should be again presented. Courts in all the states have reversed their opinions on important and momentous questions, and that without any reflection upon themselves. In view of the great difficulty involved in amending the constitution, and justly so, too, would it not have been wise to have passed an income-tax law and asked the supreme court to again pass upon the question? If the court should deny to the federal power the authority, there would still be left to us the course we are now pursuing.

But, Mr. Speaker, the president did not insist upon an income-tax measure when he convened congress in this extraordinary session. When the ways and means committee submitted what was known as the "Payne bill," it included an inheritance tax, which it was said was included at the special instance and request of the president. The bill passed this body with that provision. After the bill was taken up in the senate, the president of the United States sent a special message to congress, suggesting the adoption of what is known as the "corporation tax," assessing all corporations 2 per cent on the net income of the corporation in excess of $5,000. The senate eliminated the inheritance tax and substituted the corporation tax. It is a matter of general knowledge that the leading members of the finance committee in the senate are opened and avowed enemies of the income tax, and that the acceptance of the corporation-tax feature for the inheritance tax as incorporated in the house bill was for the sole and only purpose of defeating the income tax. It was also reported in the press and among the members of both houses, and there has been no denial of the fact, that personally there was as much objection on the part of leading members of the finance committee to the corporation tax as there was to the income tax. Yet the upper house of congress proposes to submit a constitutional amendment to the people in order to give congress the authority to do what leading senators declare they are opposed to.

Can there be much speculation as to the purpose of submitting the proposed amendment? Not only can the 6 New England states that have grown "rich beyond the dream of avarice," contributed by the the great central west, with 6 other states that have enjoyed a partnership in the plunder, defeat the proposed amendment, but even though the full number of 12 states directly could not be induced to join in the defeat, opportunity is given to pack the senates of other smaller States having a very limited representation, so that it would not concur with the other legislative branch of the body and still defeat the amendment. I vote for the submission of this amendment, because I believe, as congress is now constituted, it is the last chance to pave the way to some contributions from the great masses of wealth that do not now contribute to their own protection by the general government. I do so, too, with the full knowledge of the scheme whereby the income-tax proposition has been betrayed into ambush by its pretended friends to be silently slaughtered by that quiet hand that is so subtle and at times so powerful in state legislatures, I do so with the hope that the overwhelming force of public sentiment in the west will see to it that the purpose of those who are responsible for the plan will not accomplish the desired result.

For years the democratic party has advocated the income tax as a just measure for raising revenue. It has developed public sentiment to such an extent that the republican party that heretofore has vigorously denounced it now convertly espouses its adoption. Even if the Payne bill or the Aldrich bill would have furnished sufficient revenue, I would still be in favor of an income tax, because of the strong principle of justice and equity the proposition involves. I would enact a graduated income-tax law, reform the schedules in the dutiable list, lower the rates of duty on articles of common necessity, enlarge the free list, and lift the burden from the backs of the toiling millions of American citizens in part and place it on the pocketbooks of the idle rich. Our wealth—our congested wealth—is so great and the expenses of the general government so large that it seems to me we are bound to reform our sources of revenue.

For more than fifty years the income tax has grown in popular favor, not only in this country, but among the great powers of Europe. In England, France, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, the Netherlands, and even in the new possession of Hawaii an income tax has become a fixed and settled feature of their taxing policy. In England the government has for more than sixty consecutive years collected an income tax, the last year the amount from that one source alone being more than $165,000,000.

When the British income tax was first laid, the revenue derived from the same was used to reduce by so much the protective duties against importations of general use, thereby forcing great accumulations of wealth to pay a share of the cost of their protection and removing, in part, the burdens of taxation from the poor.

Reference has been made by the chairman of the ways and means committee to the argument of Mr. Gladstone, who, like the chairman, was an enemy of an income tax, in which Mr. Gladstone said he was opposed to the income-tax law because it would make a "nation of liars." This statement is quoted with approval as a forceful argument by the chairman against the income tax. The distinguished gentleman ought to be told that Mr. Gladstone in 1874 dissolved parliament and appealed to the people, promising them if he were returned to power he would abolish the income-tax law. On a square presentation of the issue, Mr. Gladstone and his party were crushed with humiliating defeat. The income tax has been retained and is now a permanent factor in the revenue system of the country. Can it be possible that because a man will lie about his property possessions he should not be taxed? John Sherman said: "All taxes are inquisitorial, and the income tax is least so of any system." What is the trend of public thought in this country with reference to this question? More than 40 states in fifteen years have appointed commissions to examine and inquire into the constitutional provisions of sister states, with reference to their methods of producing revenue. Thirteen states have amended their constitutions so as to remove all question of their authority to tax incomes The increasing popularity of this equitable and just system can not be diverted; it conduces to a fair and equitable distribution of the burdens, and is based upon the universally accepted principle of taxation, that in addition to the tax on articles of consumption there should be a direct tax on incomes, properly graduated. In all the changes of fifty years in our economic and industrial conditions, establishing new alignments of wealth, new forms of investments by which the wealth of society is produced and distributed, the income tax has met with no new arguments against it. Always and everywhere when the demand for greater justice in the distribution of the burdens of taxation has arisen, the income tax has been resorted to. In this country of ours with the greatest commerce, both internal and external, the greatest wealth, the greatest opportunity for expansion of our natural resources, why should we not reach these colossal fortunes and combinations for some support of the government in whose system of taxation they have found so much favor?

Gentlemen oppose an income-tax law because of its inquisitorial character. Ascertaining the basis of any system of taxation is of necessity inquisitorial, and yet these same gentlemen advocate a corporation tax law whose chief merit is the authority it gives the government to invade the privacy and pry into and spy upon the business and methods of corporations with an army of inquisitors. The alleged income tax is abondoned in the senate for one reason, viz, that congress could not enact a law that would withstand a constitutional attack; but at the same time the senate substitutes a corporation tax, labeled "a special excise tax," that, in in the opinion of many distinguished lawyers both in the house and senate, contains the same provisions that made the law of 1894 vulnerable in the Pollock case. Aside from the question of whether the present corporate amendment—the "special excise-tax" law—contains the elements of every just tax system—elements essentially necessary—equality in the distribution of the burdens it imposes, may not the legislator inquire whether or not as a permanent policy the general government ought to be permitted to reach out to these local corporations, creatures of purely state legislation, and take from the states this source of revenue? Upon what theory may the federal government inquire into the private business of a purely local corporation, not doing or attempting to do an interstate business, but acting under the limitations of a state statute that created it, fixed its rights, powers, duties, and obligations? If the federal government may put its hand into the treasury of the corporation, divide its profits between the company and the government, in defiance of state law, why may it not go further and limit and define the powers and duties of the corporation, fix the character of its operations and expenditures, restrict the state legislature in the privileges it may confer in a corporate act, and the judiciary of the state in its construction? If the federal power is to be permitted to override state boundary lines, subtract from the states their means of income, may it not continue to take more and more, till the recognized, separate, and independent rights of the states become a mere fiction? This condition deserves serious consideration. The strong, and, I may say, an almost irresistible, tendency in a representative government is toward a centralized power in the federal head. It can not but alarm all those who understand the preservation of the rights of the states to all those powers not especially delegated under the constitution to be material and necessary to our perpetuity. A century has given these independent sovereigns that compose this federation those separate rights and functions that demand our respect and protection.

It has been said that the people are prejudiced against corporations. This is not correct. They are prejudiced against trusts and combinations that crush competition and dominate legitimate lines of business for their own selfish purposes. Almost every kind of business in every community is carried on by local corporations. They are an indispensable agency in conducting the business of the country They furnish a means for investment by thousands of persons with small capital. Local corporations do not skrink from the payment of taxes, but they want no favoritism shown in apportioning the burden, and no discrimination made between classes of persons engaged in the same identical business, nor between classes, differently organized and competing for the same business.

I would vote for a corporation-tax amendment, properly drawn, if I could do so without my vote counting for the passage of the present unequal and unjust tariff measure now before congress. I would do so only when the law taxed all corporations and all associations equally, especially when engaged in the same line of business, without discrimination. I would vote under those conditions for a temporary measure, because I believe it is my first, highest, and most patriotic duty with my vote to relieve the present embarrassment of the government of ninety millions of deficit and the deficit that will occur during the next two years rather than consent to an issue of bonds, and not that I believe a corporation tax can be drawn free from all objections, or that it is an ideal measure of taxation or wholly free from constitutional doubt. I would do so, too, believing that speedy and just legislation would follow to remove, even in a temporary measure, as far as possibe, the inequalities hidden in the law.

It has been said that the publicity feature of the bill will enable the government to circumscribe the operations of the combinations and give the independent corporation a more favorable opportunity for trade. Exactly the opposite must be the result. A knowledge of the business, capital invested, indebtedness, customers of the small independent corporation struggling with the trust monster for a foothold in the trade of the country will always in some way be available to the trust, thereby giving it the means to drive its independent rival out of business and make the field of the trusts' operations wider and less restricted—its mastery more complete.

If we accord entire good faith to the authors of the Aldrich-Payne bill, they have raised the duties so high on so many articles of common consumption that all competition has been destroyed. In the language of the distinguished senator from Iowa (Senator Cummins), "complete, substantial, and effective competition is no longer a factor in American commerce." No man in all this tariff discussion has uttered a more pungent truth than this same senator when he said "the rights of the consumer of any article or commodity to competition is dearer and higher and more sacred than the right of the producer to protection"

HOW TWO GIRLS MADE A VACATION PAY

LAST summer two girls had a vacation so delightfully novel, yet paying, that their plan may prove helpful to other girls who are even now wondering where the money is to come from to see them through next winter. The girls were friends—one of them a student in a domestic science school, the other in an art school, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Each had another year to go and just enough money to pay for their board, and no more. It was imperative that they raise money for their tuition and incidentals. Many plans suggested themselves, but all had the drawbacks that they were too confining. Both girls were rather delicate, and to get through the hard work of the coming winter must be built up by an open-air life during vacation.

A friend of theirs—a man who had toured much through the country—told the girls of a picturesque three-room cottage on top of a hill in a part of New England much frequented by automobiles. It was at the junction of several roads and the steep grade made breakdowns frequent. The house, he had found on inquiry, had the reputation of being haunted, so had been untenanted for years, though kept in good repair by the owner. To disprove this silly rumor, it could be rented for $25 from June to October. "Why not," said the man, "hire the house and run a sort of wayside inn? I am sure you two girls could make it both popular and paying." The house proved on inspection to be admirably adapted to the business.

At first the girls only served tea and sandwiches, but the tea was not boiled and was served in transparent cups, and the sandwiches were the kind you generally find on well-equipped tea tables, only more substantial in size. In about a week milk was added to the menu, and fresh eggs, little nut cakes and cookies which did not easily get stale, ginger bread freshly baked each day and a delicious seafoam candy, which could be made in a few minutes and cost only the price of the brown sugar.

After some debate the girls decided to charge city prices, and had no difficulty in getting them. When, as occasionally happened, they were asked to get up a cooked lunch, they expected to be paid well for their trouble.

One of the girls was an artist and kept a supply of small sketches, dainty birchbark work boxes and letter cases, on which she painted the monograms of the buyer while they waited, and hand-painted postals with bits of the surrounding scenery. She also had a happy knack of rapidly drawing caricatures and doing silhouettes, and long before the season was over she was doing a thriving business. Even the other swelled the finances, as she knit a charming baby blanket with an odd new stitch, which the women moforists were only too glad to know. Typewritten directions were sold for 50 cents, and the stitch was taught for a dollar extra. Many orders were given for the blankets themselves.

The fame of the tearoom as a resting place spread far, and by the time college opened the girls had more than enough to see them through the winter, did not know the meaning of nerves and had made some delightful friends.

STARR SAYS WOMAN IS STILL A BARBARIAN

Professor of the University of Chicago Scores Femininity in a Magazine.

FURS, GEMS, DRESS, ALL WRONG

None of Sex Ever Has Accomplished Anything Worth While, Is Educator's Assertion.

"Woman, the eternal savage, whose only salvation lies in the fact that she always has been and always will be a savage," has been flayed again by the lash of a professor of the University of Chicago. Prof. Frederick Starr, famous scientist and ethnological explorer, enters the lists with Prof. Thomas of the same university, who has denounced womankind. In an article entitled "The Women Men Marry," appearing in the Red Book Magazine, Prof. Starr has presented an analysis of women in general that quite surpasses the attacks of Prof. Thomas in severity.

Women are not civilized, according to the astute investigator. Furthermore, they should not be civilized.

FREDERICK STARR

What is more, they can't be," he continues, for the fundamental nature of woman is barbaric, and it is better so, since the prosperity, even the continuance of the race, depends upon the rigid assertion of the fundamental difference between man and woman.

"Can anyone anywhere actually point to a single first-class achievement in literature, in science, in art, by woman?" is the challenge issued by Prof. Starr that is likely to bring upon him a storm of answers from the champions of women and the admirers of the work accomplished by women.

"Woman's religion is also notably that of lower culture," he asserts. "She is always seeing signs in everything; she avoids having thirteen at her table and starting on a journey on Friday; she is the chief supporter of the spiritualistic mediums. She is the founder of new sects in which the religious attitude of savagery is given high-sounding names and maintained by the most select individuals; she dabbles constantly in the occult. And spiritualism and mental science and the occult are among the oldest ideas of savagery. And when she reaches the ideal of God, how naive and crude-ly anthropomorphic is her real conception!"

Like Sisters of Jungle.

In woman's love for bright colors, her fondness for decorating herself with birds and the furs of animals, in her world-old fondness for jewels and her inclination to perfume herself, Prof. Starr finds indications that the woman of to-day has not advanced far above her sister of the jungle. But these are only the superficial evidences of her savagery. The heart of her non-advancement lies deeper. In the very fundamentals of her characters, in her very instincts, he says, woman has come down through the ages unchanged.

"Savage ingenuity in gaining ends through deception, ruse and treachery has become proverbial," is the professor's assertion. "Civilized woman retains these practices of savagery. When it would seem equally easy for her to gain her end by straightforward and direct methods she delights to resort to sinuous means and duplicity.

"Woman lives in an old, old world," is another observation. "She thinks the old thoughts, feels the old emotions, is moved by the old impulses; she dresses in the old gewgaws; she is thrilled by the world-old hopes and fears.

"There is only one older member of society; there is only one other that can contest with her. The child, of course, is the oldest of human beings; the woman is next nearest to the childhood of the race."

Prof. Starr's protest seems especially to be directed against the higher education for woman. "Woman may prove her ability to learn geometry and history and astronomy; she may discuss the vital questions of the day; she may devote herself to journalism and authorship; but when she does it on a large scale the intellectual group must die," he argues. "It is bad enough to have bespectacled, bald-headed male intellectuals; it can be endured by the race so long as the women are vigorous and full of feminine life and vitality, ready for home and motherhood; but when both halves of the higher classes enter the same field and turn out the same product demonstrate their similarity, perpetuation is impossible.

"It is suggestive to notice how often the pushing and aggressive man of business, who plans and does great things, flies for refuge to the silly and frivolous butterfly, who retains, with savagery, sufficient anabolism to give at least some hope for the future."

On the subject of clothes of womankind the ethnologist grows eloquent. "In her fondness for evidence of slaughter and bloodshed," he says, "woman's savagery is still more notable."

"The other day, upon the street car, one woman's hat had breasts of fourteen birds set upright side by side as decorations. Outside of a few admittedly primitive communities in our land to-day the wearing of furs and skins by men has passed away, but women still love to load themselves with pelts of seals and minks and lynxes. The more realistic the fact of death is made the better, on the whole, the women seem to be suited. The head of the killed animal adds to the attractiveness of many of these trophy decorations. Jewelry in civilization is an incongruity; in a democracy it is even worse. Where the art of the jeweler is in growing favor, under a republican government, the signs for the future are indeed threatening."

Thus far the professor. And now wait for the women!

UNCLE SAM, OFFICIAL "MAKER OF MONEY" FOR SOUTH AMERICAN NATIONS

IT is the policy of the United States government to do everything possible to maintain friendly relations with the sister republics of the New World, writes Rene Bach in the Washington Post. One way to be of service to them is to attend to the business of their coinage. Very little trouble is involved. Suppose, for example, that Panama wishes to make a new issue of silver pieces of half a dozen different denominations. She sends her minister at Washington to see the Secretary of State on the subject, and the latter jots down a little memorandum, which he transmits to the Secretary of the Treasury.

With this memorandum goes a document certifying that the minister is in fact the envoy extraordinary from Panama, and therefore entitled to order and receive the coins. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his turn, hands the matter over to the director of the mint, who does a little figuring on his own account, and as a result prepares an estimate of cost. This estimate, plus the bare expense for labor, goes back to the Secretary of the Treasury, who indorses it and orders the work to be done. All of which seems like a great deal of red tape. In reality, however, it is necessary, because every precaution must be taken in such a case against the possibility of fraud.

Now, to go back to the minister from Panama; nobody is permitted to know how much he pays for the coins he orders. It is a diplomatic secret—one reason for such secrecy being that it is not desired that foreign governments shall know what Uncle Sam bids for business of this kind. The government of Panama is required to furnish the dies, because the laws of the United States forbid the Treasury to make them for any outsider. This is a small affair, however, the cost of a pair of dies for striking both sides of a metal blank being from $200 to $350.

Let us suppose that the order for Panama is filled at the mint in Philadelphia. When it is completed the Treasury Department notifies the minister through the Secretary of State, and he makes a trip to the Quaker City, where the entire batch of coins is counted and weighed in his presence. Likewise, in his presence they are poured into bags, packed in strong wooden boxes and delivered to the agent of the express company which has been authorized to put them aboard a steamer bound for the isthmus.

Coins, of course, are stamped—their designs, that is to say—on blank disks of metal. The blanks for the Santo Domingo pieces were furnished by the representative of that country. But such arrangements vary. Costa Rica, for example, paid for her colones in full-weight gold coin of the United States, delivered in advance at the mint in Philadelphia—the mint using an equivalent amount of gold bullion in the manufacture of the pieces. The little republic of Panama has had all of its coins made in the United States. They are called "balboas," and are split up into astonishingly small fractions.

HARRY ORCHARD, BAPTIZED, IS NOW A "DEVOUT CONVERT."

Harry Orchard, murderer of former Governor Steunenberg of Idaho, was baptized at the penitentiary in Boise. The service was read by Elder Steward, a Seventh Day Adventist, who said: "Orchard is a devout convert and feels his sins have been forgiven. He told me that he had fully determined to commit suicide if sent up for life, but that in his faith he had found consolation and was content to remain behind the prison walls for the rest of his life."

Famous Chief of the Choctaws

Among the great and good Indians that America has produced, probably the greatest was Peter P. Pitchlynn, for years the head chief of the Choctaw Nation and the father of the Indian princess now so successfully conducting a chicken farm in the heart of Washington. Charles Dickens said he was the most remarkable man he met in the United States. He was born in Mississippi early in the last century, and after graduating at the University of Nashville became one of the heads of his tribe. When the conference looking to the removal of the Choctaws to new lands in the Indian Territory was held, he took the lead in the council, and there distinguished himself by refusing to shake the hand of President Jackson because he thought him acting with imposition upon his people. Later they became great friends. He headed the first expedition of the Indians to look upon the territory offered across the

PETER PITCHLYNN.

"Great River." In this new country the Choctaws would be neighbors of their hereditary enemies, the Osages. Their small band of thirty met the Osages in council and offered perpetual peace, but the latter were sullen and defiant. Although surrounded by thousands of enemies, Chief Pitchlynn arose, and hurled back the defiance in an oration filled with fire. "Our soil has never been tracked by an Osage except as a prisoner," he said. "When we remove here we will not finish building our cabins before you shall hear the war-whoop of the Choctaw and the crack of his rifle, and the very name of Osage shall be forgotten. I tell you now we take back all we said yesterday about peace, and such a proposition, if made, must now come from the Osages." This was too defiant for even that warlike tribe, and a treaty of peace was signed next day.

Chief Pitchlynn was a great friend of Henry Clay. He heard the latter conversing with a passenger on an Ohio steam boat. After listening, charmed, for an hour, "If that old farmer with the ugly face had only been educated for the law," he said to a friend, "he would have made one of the greatest men in the country." The "old farmer" heard of it, met Chief Pitchlynn, and ever after aided him in all his efforts on behalf of the Choctaws.

For years Chief Pitchlynn ruled his people in peace and prosperity in their rich Oklahoma (red man's country). When the Civil War broke out he hurried to Washington and assured President Lincoln of the neutrality of the Choctaws, an act which the latter recognized by the most marked attention and respect to his opinions throughout the conflict. When the emancipation proclamation appeared he cheerfully acquiesced in the freedom of the 100 slaves he owned. For this reason the Confederates harried his rich plantation, leaving him doubly desolated.

Long before this he had been made head chief of the nation, and for twenty-five years was their delegate to Congress. He was an intimate friend of President Grant, who rendered him able assistance in securing the rights of the Choctaws from the government. He made many speeches before congressional committees, the eloquence of which placed him among the foremost orators of the time.

It was through his long residence in Washington that his daughter came to make her home here, and when he died some years ago she had become too much attached to return to her old plantation under the Kamichie mountains, in the distant "red man's land."—Washington Post.

AN ANCIENT BICYCLE.

Great-Great-Grandfather of the Modern Wheel.

AGAINST the front of a shop in the southeast quarter of the city of Washington there is leaning, weary with age and rusty from disuse for four generations, an ancient bicycle. It is the decrepit great-great-grandfather of the modern high-geared scorcher, and it compares to the bright enameled racing wheels of 1909 that recline alongside as an old stage coach of the days of Jefferson would to the glistening motor cars of the present day. "This two-wheeled patriarch is the earliest form of the bicycle," said Mr. Higham, the owner of the relic. "It was designed by Baron von Drais in 1816 as a vehicle to assist him in his daily duties as chief forester to the Grand Duke of Baden and was called by various names. In Germany it was known as a 'Draisine,' after the name of the inventor; in France as a 'celeropede;' in England as a 'curricle,' and in the United States as a 'glider.' A few years ago the bicycle enthusiasts of Europe erected a monument to the memory of the baron.

This antique consists of two wheels of equal size, very much in form like diminutive buggy wheels, connected by a rude frame of iron. It has neither pedal nor running gear of any kind, for our forefathers who affected this style of locomotion had not learned the art of propelling themselves with feet entirely off the ground. Their method was to stride the saddle, which sits on the frame between the two wheels, pinioned on a spring shaft of about two inches play, walk rapidly along the road until a good start was gotten, and then, lifting their feet, get the benefit of the momentum and roll along until the ungainly machine began to sway and falter, when down went the feet again and another running start was taken, followed by a subsequent glide, or "coast," as it is called to-day.

It was a favorite way of getting from one plantation to another in the days of Old Virginia. To operate one was considered a social art, and the beaux of 1830 and the years following vied with each other in acquiring dexterity in handling the glider, which sank into oblivion for nearly half a century until the introduction in 1866 of the velocipede.

"The sudden abandonment and decay of the glider in the latter thirties of the last century," says an authority, "was due to a nickname inflicted upon the poor old vehicle. Some wag dubbed them 'dandy horses.' That killed them with the sensitive and gilded gallants of the day. In less than a year it was all over with the glider. For years nothing was done in the two-wheeled vehicle line until the old-fashioned velocipede, of French make, was imported into America—really the old glider in form, with a crank on the front wheel. They could make eight or ten miles an hour on those old machines, and that was a good deal better than the average horse could make over the average road of a hundred years ago."

"DRUMMERS" OF THE PAST.

Marshall Field Knew "the Road" from Personal Experience.

Marshall Field was a commercial traveler; so were John Wanamaker and Tom Murray. So also were Dwight L. Moody, the great evangelist, and Richard Cobden, the famous English statesman and writer. Ex-Gov. Frank Black, of New York, followed "the road" with his sample cases before beginning his legal and political career. Walter D. Moody, one of the chief executives of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and author of "Men Who Sell Things," was for fifteen years a road salesman. This list might be extended almost indefinitely, Forrest Crissey says in Everybody's.

Occasionally the commercial traveler leaves the road to enter one of the professions. Milton J. Foreman, one of the leaders of the Chicago bar, president of the Chicago Charter Association, alderman and a power in local politics, was a "star" hat salesman and took his law books on the road with him until he was well grounded in the rudiments of the profession.

Another commercial traveler, Charles N. Crewdson, took a course in the University of Chicago after he was married. There he became interested in Egyptology and later, between his regular commercial trips on the road, visited Egypt and studied the ancient ruins at first hand. This brought him into print in a series of travel articles and he found that he could write and write well. Later he began to draw upon his experience as a commercial traveler for literary material and scored a success and a national reputation. But he resolutely withstood all temptation to be drawn away from the road. His work kept him in touch with the world of affairs, and one day his alert eye caught sight of the opportunity to start a novel business enterprise "on the side." His "road partner" became his actual partner in the new enterprise. Their work for their respective houses took them where they most needed to go in the interest of their private venture. To-day one of these men draws a salary of $12,000 and the other a little less than that, while their private venture probably yields them more than they earn from their regular calling.

The Struggle.

Your trouble is not so much in what you have to do; it is the coming to the condition where you are ready to say in your heart, "I will do it." This is the struggle.—Rev. J. C. Hayes, True Life Church, San Jose, Cal.

Not Inherited.

Nothing would induce good old Doctor Dore to believe that gout was hereditary. A very young man once consulted him in his first attack.

"You call this gout, Willie?" said the doctor. "Pooh! Pooh! You have not yet earned that costly privilege."

"But my father, sir, and my grandfather?" said Willie. "It is in my blood by right of inheritance."

"Nonsense!" frowned the doctor. "You may as well tell one you have a broken leg in your veins by inheritance."

The negro, although proverbially improvident, sometimes has his weather eye open.

OWES HER LIFE TO

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vienna, W. Va.—"I feel that I owe the last ten years of my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Eleven years ago I was a walking shadow. I had been under the doctor's care but got no relief. My husband persuaded me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like a charm. It relieved all my pains and misery. I advise all suffering women to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—MRS. EMMA WHEATON, Vienna, W. Va.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any similar medicine in the country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every such suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

A Substitute.

The young lawyer, having been nominated for the office of county attorney, thought to surprise an eccentric genius by the name of Si who was working as a hired man on the young lawyer's father's farm.

"Well, Si, what do you think?" the young man began.

"Sometimes one thing, Lonny, an' sometimes 'nother."

"But, Si, they have nominated me for county attorney."

"They might 'a' done worse, Lonny Howsomever, don't holler till you're out of the woods."

The young attorney was duly elected, and on his next visit to the farm announced the fact unctuously to Si, who was at the wood pile, saw in hand.

"Well, Si, I am elected by a large majority. What do you think of that?"

"Well, Lonny, down in our parts where I was raised, when we wanted a stopper, 'n' hadn't any cork, we generally took a corn-cob."

Irving was playing "Macbeth," so runs the story in "Impressions of Henry Irving, and he had reached the place where Macbeth orders Banquo's ghost to leave the banquet board.

Jim's Veracity.

Hogs, as is well known, are remarkably sagacious animals, quick to detect human peculiarities, especially when they affect their own interests, and especially their food supply. A writer in the Kansas City Star tells of a discussion at a village grocery store which brought in this interesting fact. The veracity of old Jim Perkins was under discussion.

Presently Uncle Bill Abbott ambled in.

"What do you think about it, Uncle Bill?" they asked him. "Would you call Jim a liar?"

"Well," answered Uncle Bill, slowly, as he thoughtfully studied the ceiling, "I don't know as I'd go as far as to call him a liar exactly, but I do know that when feeding time comes, in order to get the hogs to come, he has to have somebody else call 'em for him."

BEAUTY BACILLUS NOW.

Inoculations Given by Bacteriologists to Improve the Complexion.

Instead of relying on ointments and lotions, the victim of a bad complexion may now call in the aid of the scientific bacteriologist. For the past six months inoculations for beautifying the complexion have constituted a large part of the daily work at the inoculation department of St. Mary's Hospital, the London Daily Mail says.

How the injection of a few millions of disease germs into the tissues of the shoulder or flank can transform a sluggish, blotchy complexion to a normal, healthy skin was explained at the hospital yesterday. The best results are obtained in the cases of "muddy," sallow complexions, due to the sluggish action of the skin glands. The disease here is caused by a recently discovered germ named the "acne bacillus." In other cases where the skin is tender and painful, another germ, the staphylococcus, is usually found as well. The treatment consists of injecting under the skin vaccines composed of one or both of these two bacilli, according to the symptoms of the case.

The ordinary patient seeking treatment for a bad complexion will receive in his first dose about 125 millions of staphylococci, with, perhaps, five millions of the acne bacilli. The vaccines are manufactured in the laboratory, and are supplied in tiny glass bulbs, each holding about a teaspoonful. One of these bulbs is sufficient for three or four doses, and, contains well over 500 million of the bacilli.

One great advantage of the new "complexion treatment" is the little time required. A tiny patch of skin on the shoulder or flank is carefully washed and sterilized, and the vaccine is injected with a hypodermic syringe, the entire treatment taking only a minute or two.

ON FOOD.

The Right Foundation of Food.

Proper food is the foundation of health. People can eat improper food for a time until there is a sudden collapse of the digestive organs, then all kinds of trouble follows.

The proper way out of the difficulty is to shift to the pure, scientific food, Grape Nuts, for it rebuilds from the foundation up. A New Hampshire woman says:

"Last summer I was suddenly taken with indigestion and severe stomach trouble and could not eat food without great pain, my stomach was so sore I could hardly move about. This kept up until I was so miserable life was not worth living.

"Then a friend finally, after much argument, induced me to quit my former diet and try Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had but little faith I commenced to use it and great was my surprise to find that I could eat it without the usual pain and distress in my stomach.

"So I kept on using Grape-Nuts and soon a marked improvement was shown, for my stomach was performing its regular work in a normal way without pain or distress.

"Very soon the yellow coating disappeared from my tongue, the dull, heavy feeling in my head disappeared and my mind felt light and clear; the languid, tired feeling left, and altogether I felt as if I had been rebuilt. Strength and weight came back rapidly and I went back to my work with renewed ambition.

"To-day I am a new woman in mind as well as body and I owe it all to this natural food, Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

FARM AND GARDEN

Farm Poultry House.

For a farmer's poultry house I know of nothing that will give better satisfaction than a moveable colony house, such as is used at Macdonald College, Que., a photo and plan of which accompanies. This house is 8x12 feet, floor built on two skids and accommodates 25 hens and 3 males in the winter and half as many more during the summer. A team of horses can draw it to any part of the farm that may be desired. This gives fresh ground to the hens, and feed that might otherwise go to waste, can be made use of. For farm use the studding need not be so high, and the house can be built of available material. A loose board ceiling over which is placed straw provides for the absorption of moisture and even in the coldest days, hens are quite comfortable. A farmer can add to his equipment one house at a time, and gradually work up to the desired number.—F. C. Elford.

Cockleburs.

A good many farmers are still struggling with the cocklebur nuisance. It is possible to rid the ranch of this pest in one year and realize a profit on the operation. Any time before the weeds have attained much height take a plow and harrow to the field and before the day is done sow one and one-half bushels of good kaffir corn to each acre plowed. Harrow well and the next day repeat the operation until the cocklebur territory has been thoroughly covered. When the kaffir seed is in the dough mow or bind with a harvester and you will have one of the very best crops or roughage to be had. Remove this crop from the field as soon as convenient. Two years or so of this kind of tillage will clean out the burs and the operation is certainly worth while.—Denver Field and Farm.

Pump for the Garden.

A good pump should be part of the equipment of every garden. For the small garden a good bucket, compressed air or knapsack pump will be most satisfactory, while for larger gardens a barrel pump, with an attachment for spraying several rows when occasion demands, or an automatic pump geared to the wheels of the truck, will be found more economical of time and labor. The small compressed air sprayer is handy, as it leaves both hands free for use, and is, therefore, useful if it is desired to spray two or three small trees, possibly with the use of a stepladder to reach their tops.

Fertilizers.

Fertilizers may be divided into two general classes—direct and indirect, or nutritive and stimulant. A direct or nutritive fertilizer is one which furnishes nourishment to the growing crop. Nourishment means simply nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. These are the three ingredients which must be renewed through the medium of manures and fertilizers. A stimulant or indirect fertilizer is one which does not furnish an actual plant food to the soil, but by its stimulating action renders available some plant food which previously existed in the soil in an insoluble or unavailable condition.

The Real Value of Sheep.

The census report cannot give the real value of sheep. Outside of the value of sheep as producers of meat and wool, there is a benefit conferred by them to land. Pastures occupied by sheep become richer every year, and bushes, weeds and briars, which so readily grow where they are not desired, are kept down by sheep and their places occupied by grass. The poorest kind of land, if given up to sheep, even if it is necessary to allow feed to them, will be made productive in a few years.

Horses and Corn Growing.

In growing corn one of the factors that is seldom rated at its true worth is first-class motive power. Anyone who has plowed, harrowed, planted and cultivated with an ill-matched, short-weighted, high-strung team knows how difficult it is to do good work. No farm hand thus handicapped can render a service that is satisfactory to a good farmer. Farm teams should be evenly matched as to age, size and temperament. Weight is essential. Teams should be big enough to keep a reserve power constantly on tap; they should draw any implement with ease and at a steady, lively pace. If they are of standard draft type and are shifted occasionally from one class of service to another they will go through the season without breakdowns. This depends, however, to a large extent on how they are fed and managed. Much depends also on the ease and comfort which they enjoy in the collar; sore necks and galled shoulders, due to poorly-fitted collars, prove serious obstacles to good, continuous work. Corn-belt farms should be equipped with heavy draft teams; the highest type of diversified agriculture in that territory depends on this reliable, efficient motive power. Big horses bear a close relationship to a big corn crop.—Chicago Live Stock World.

Dipping Stock for Lice.

There are various kinds of stock dips, and most of them are good. Their use is becoming more common because their value is better known than formerly. Almost every stockman has animals that are not thrifty, and he don't know the reason why. It very often happens that such animals are troubled with parasites of some kind, perhaps several kinds. They are too small to be seen with the naked eye, and the farmer tries different kinds of medicines, when an outside application of some disinfectant is the only remedy needed. When stockmen once learn the value of dipping they need no further encouragement. They keep on dipping twice a year, because they know it pays both in dollars and in satisfaction.

We have found crude oil one of the best and most effective louse killers and disinfectants. It makes an excellent dip for swine. It will remove all of the old scales and scurf and improve the general appearance of the herd.

When mixed with crude carbolic acid at the rate of one gallon of crude carbolic acid to fifty gallons of crude oil it makes a cheap and effective disinfectant for use in the hog houses, hen houses and water holes in the hog lot where hogs are accustomed to wallow.

It will, when used alone, prove a very cheap oil to use on farm machinery when it is stored away for winter.

It can be used with safety as a fly repellant on all farm animals by the use of sprayers, and will prove as well adapted to that purpose as many of the more expensive dips and mixtures. For cuts and bruises on farm animals it is excellent and can be used with safety. Use on cows' teats when sore.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Testing Milk.

In some sections many of the best dairymen are adapting the Holland plan of combining and hiring men to visit each herd one day in the month and test the milk of each cow, thus giving the owners an idea of which cows are the ones that are paying for their keep. This plan is a very sensible one and should be encouraged. The cost is comparatively small, as the tester boards with the family while he is doing his work and is carried to the next place the day he has completed his work. This insures regularity in the work. In Michigan this plan has greatly increased the average production per cow. Wisconsin, too, has taken up this matter. It is good business and it may become popular, but some of our dairymen are hard to turn from the beaten paths of their fathers.—Farmers and Drovers' Journal.

Sheep and Dogs.

In some counties of England, it is said, a law exists compelling a lamb to be produced for each acre on the farm. The value of sheep on the farm is thoroughly understood and appreciated by the English people. In some of the States in this country the rule seems to be to produce a dog for nearly each acre. Sheep are constant farm improvers, while dogs are exactly the opposite. But for the prevalence of worthless curs there are many sections where sheep would be raised and their keeping would turn the tide that would soon lead to profitable farming.

Why Pity the Farmer?

Mr. Mann of Geuda Springs, says a Kansas newspaper, loaded a large, fat hog into his automobile and took it to market in Arkansas City, where he got a good price for the porker. It took him a mighty short time to get the hog to town and get the cash for it. A few minutes' scrubbing fixed the auto so that it did not smell like a barnyard, and the hog probably enjoyed the ride. What's the use holding meetings trying to improve conditions of farm life?

Feeding Sheep.

There are several points in feeding sheep that must not be overlooked. The feed lot must be dry, with plenty of clean, dry bedding; the animals must have plenty of clean, pure water, and the feed troughs should be kept clean. These should be arranged so that the sheep cannot foul them with their feet. Another point is to keep them from becoming excited or frightened. To this end it is better that one person feed them all the time.

Sowing Orchard Grass.

If orchard grass is not sown thickly it will not be a success. Three bushels to the acre should be used. Orchard grass is more vigorous than timothy, with a stronger root system; but if a permanent meadow is expected it must be top-dressed freely.

The Sorrel Horse.

There is no color of horse so insensible to heat as the sorrel. There is seldom any coat so silky or responds so quickly to good care as the sorrel, and many horsemen claim there is seldom any horse with such sound feet and limbs or possessing the endurance of the sorrel.

American Wheat.

The United States annually exports more wheat flour than all the other countries of the world combined—15,000,000 out of 26,000,000 barrels.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Corn Fritters.

Take twelve small ears of corn, free them from all silk, cut the grains down the center, and scrape all the corn and milk off the cob; add two tablespoonfuls of flour, two eggs well beaten, pepper and salt to taste, and mix the whole well together. Put a tablespoon of this mixture at a time in a frying pan with hot lard or butter; when brown, turn them and serve them hot. If the corn is large it will require three eggs; if very milky, a little extra flour. It should be thicker than pancake batter; a hot fire will cook them in five minutes. They are excellent for breakfast, and may be mixed the night before. If wanted for dessert put in sugar instead of salt and pepper, and serve with your favorite sauce.

Preserved Green Grapes.

Steam and wash the green grapes, put them in a porcelain-lined kettle and pour boiling water over them. Leave this on for only a minute to loosen the skins, then drain. To each quart of grapes add a cup of water, return to the fire and boil until tender. Strain the fruit and measure the pulp, and add to it two-thirds as much sugar as there is pulp. Put into the preserving kettle and boil gently for about fifteen minutes more, taking care that the sugar and fruit do not scorch. Skim frequently while boiling. Pour into glass jars and seal.

Creamed Celery.

Wash and scrape one bunch of celery, cut in half-inch pieces, and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and reduce the water to one cup. Melt four level tablespoons of butter, and three level tablespoons of flour, three-fourths level teaspoon of salt and one-eighth level teaspoon of pepper. Stir until blended and add gradually the cup of water in which the celery was cooked and one cup of hot milk. Stir until thick and smooth; strain over the celery, heat thoroughly and serve.

Diced Liver.

One pound of calf's or lamb's liver, one-half pound of bacon; cover with water and simmer very gently for two hours, or until thoroughly tender. Drain and cut in small cubes, return these to the fire and cook for ten minutes, seasoning with salt and pepper and tossing frequently, that they may brown lightly and evenly. Serve on strips of hot buttered toast, moistened with the liquor in which the meat was cooked. Chile or Worcestershire sauce should be offered with this savory supper dish.

Cream Cheese.

Allow a pinch of salt and a teaspoonful of unflavored rennet to every quart of milk, and when you have a solid curd turn into a bag and let it drip. It may have to hang for a day before the whey ceases to drip from it, but when this stage is reached take the curd out, chop it fine, put into a cheese box and press two hours. Wrap in tissue paper or in tinfoil. Change bag at end of twelve hours should the curd take that length of time to drip.

Tomato Salad.

Peel and slice rather thick three tomatoes, slice six stalks of celery, chop one half a small onion and an eighth of a green pepper. Spread these over the sliced tomatoes and add French dressing.

Peach Fritters.

Peel and cut in halves peaches not over-ripe. Sprinkle with sugar, then roll in regular fritter batter, powdered macaroons or fine stale cake crumbs. Fry in deep fat and drain and roll in powdered sugar.

Short Suggestions.

Keep your young onions, radishes and lettuces in ice-cold water before serving.

Bright sunshine will remove scorch which has been made by using an overheated iron.

Milk that is a trifle "blinky" can be used for cooking purposes if a little soda is added to sweeten it.

Put cherries in tin vessels and cover with water, keeping them in a cool place until a convenient time to cook them.

Cut the black marks from string beans. They are not earth "rust" marks, but the effect of destroying bugs eating the vegetables.

Hot water assists in paring small potatoes or peaches. Pour water over them, let stand for a few minutes and the skins can be rubbed off.

It is said that a teaspoonful of salt and one of pulverized soap added to every two cupfuls of starch will give a fine glaze to the starched clothes.

Bluing placed in pans of water set about for little chickens to drink will cure the gapes. Red pepper or pepper seeds can be put into the water for the same purpose.

The most convenient and cheapest of all disinfectants to use in the cellar is quicklime. It may be placed in dishes, in bins or cupboards, or scattered loose in dark, damp corners.

Save all the tissue paper, whether torn or not. It is useful for cleaning mirrors, plate glass and table glassware. Spoons can be cleaned with dry tissue paper that has been dipped in whiting.

In selecting a pure linen tablecloth, if you are no judge of linen, moisten the goods with the tongue, and if a damp spot appears on the opposite side you may rest assured the linen is good. If not, the moisture would be long in penetrating the weave.

Rhubarb is sometimes stewed with raisins or with prunes. One housewife's favorite way of making this dish is to add to a quart of stewed and sweetened rhubarb half a pound of stewed but unsweetened prunes. Boil a moment or two and cool. Serve cold.

CHILD HAS SIXTY BOILS

And Suffered Annually with a Red Scald-Like Humor on Her Head—Troubles Cured by Cuticura.

"When my little Vivian was about six months old her head broke out in boils. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, which cured her entirely. Some time later a humor broke out behind her ears and spread up on to her head until it was nearly half covered. The humor looked like a scald, very red with a sticky, clear fluid coming from it. This occurred every spring. I always used Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which never failed to heal it up. The last time it broke out it became so bad that I was discouraged. But I continued the use of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent until she was well and has never been troubled in the last two years. Mrs. M. A. Schwerin, 674 Spring Wells Ave., Detroit, Mich., Feb. 24, 1908."

Teaching Him a Lesson.

The new mail carrier on the rural free delivery route glanced at the name on the letter box by the roadside, stopped his horse, and spoke to the roughly attired farmer with the old slouch hat, who was resting his sun-browned arms on the gate and looking at him.

"I see," he said, "your name is Holmes."

"Yes."

"Beverly G.?"

"Yes, I'm the man that lives here."

"Any relation to Sherlock Holmes?" gravely asked the carrier.

"No, sir," answered the farmer, "but I'm detective enough to know that you're not a very good judge of human nature. You took me for an ignoramus because I've got my old working duds on. I'm Sherlock Holmes enough to look at a man's face and eyes before I size him up as a— Some mail for me? Thanks."

How to Cure Kidney Troubles Easily and Quickly.

It is needless to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the misery of headaches, rheumatic pains, urinary disorders or risk the danger of diabetes or Bright's disease. The cure is easy. Treat the cause—the kidneys—with Doan's Kidney Pills. P. W. Champion, Salem St., Marion, Ky., says: "I did not expect ever to be well again. Deranged kidneys caused me untold sufferings. Stones in the kidneys seemed to be tearing me apart and the secretions were seriously disordered. Doan's Kidney Pills righted this trouble and removed all pains and aches and dissolved the stones. I am completely cured."

Remember the name—Doan's. Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Beyond Reformation.

Patience—She says she married him to reform him. Patrice—And he says he was a fool when he married her. "Well, she says she hasn't reformed him a bit."—Yonkers Statesman.

Technically Incorrect.

The Doctor—He's what you might call a walking lamp of knowledge.

The Professor—Not exactly; he's a roamin' candle.

If you wish beautiful, clear, white clothes, use Red Cross Ball Blue. Large 2oz. package, 5 cents

Stuffing Him.

"You people are at peace with all the world," remarked the foreigner. "What do you need of a standing army and a big navy?"

"Principally," said the native, "to keep Capt. Hobson quiet."—Chicago Tribune.

Color and Lies.

"But sometimes it's right to tell a white lie, isn't it?"

"Perhaps. But I notice that when a man gets that idea once, it isn't long till he becomes color blind."—Cleveland Leader.

A careful estimate shows that the buildings and land on Manhattan island from the Battery to Central Park are worth $2,900,000,000.

DESPAIR FEVER.

Russian Doctor so Names Condition That Causes Many Suicides.

In "despair fever" Dr. Dvoretzky, a well known professor of Kieff University, St. Petersburg, has discovered, isolated and given name to a new Russian disease. He says the malady is one that is spreading with tremendous swiftness and shows itself in a vast majority of cases in the desire of the patient to commit suicide. As far as the professor knows the disease is confined to Russia, where all strata of Russian society and all ages and sexes are suffering from it. It affects the 10-year-old child and the octogenarian alike.

Dr. Dvoretzky does not maintain that it is a new disease. His contention is simply that for the first time the awful ailment with which all Russia is afflicted has been classified and named. The average number of those who commit suicide every month in Russia is 350—more than 4,000 each year. All of these, Dr. Dvoretzky says, are sufferers from "despair fever." In Moscow alone there were last year nearly 600 cases and in St. Petersburg nearly 1,500.

Most of the deaths are among young men and women between the ages of 18 and 30. The most popular form of death is poison, but there are numerous other well approved forms of self-destruction. In Odessa, for example, no less than six persons suffering from despair fever consumed themselves with fire.

Dr. Dvoretzky says he calls the disease "despair fever" because its victims are always persons who find nothing but despair in the future both as regards their own lot and the fate of the country in which they live. They see nothing but weariness and a stagnant life for themselves and nothing but increasing unhappiness for the country. This stagnant life the Russian youth fear even more than death.

Straight Goods.

Charles A. Dana, for many years the editor of the New York Sun, believed that the work of reporting should be worthy the best there is in a man. A contributor to the American Magazine gives several anecdotes of Mr. Dana's dealings with his reporters, many of whom learned from him lessons by which they profited and rose in their profession. On one occasion a reporter complained because he was kept on police court work.

"Young man," said Dana, "the greatest police court reporter who ever lived was named Charles Dickens."

Another compained that they had "boiled down" his story.

"The story of the crucifixion was told in six hundred words," said Dana.

He used to come out, continues the contributor, all excitement, and pointing to a mark on the margin of a clipping, say to his managing editor:

"A great sentence there, Mr. Lord. Who wrote it?"

"Who did that football story?" he asked once.

When Dana put such a question, his interlocutor used to tremble; there was no telling from his tone whether he mean to praise or to blame.

Mr. Lord named the man.

"It's Homer, that's what it is," said Dana.

"The reporter," he said again, "wields the real power of the press."

This, with all that it implies, was the thing which Dana left to his world.

Dust Cripples Children

Winona, Minn., is fighting an epidemic of infantile paralysis, which attacks children between the ages of six months and ten years, and where it does not kill leaves the victims helpless cripples.

When efforts of the board of health failed to check the growing number of cases, the state authorities were called in. They said the disease germ was carried in the dust from the streets into susceptible organs of the children. The thirty or more cases are scattered throughout the outlying districts which are not sprinkled.

A special meeting of the council was held and it was decided to sprinkle the entire city, alleys, streets and sidewalks to rid the city of the germs.

Ten Doctors Said He Would Die

"In 1903 we wrote you regarding my husband, who was suffering from heart trouble. He was superanuated by the North Georgian Conference. Ten doctors at different times said he would die. You advised Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Restorative Nervine; we did as advised, and improvement was apparent from the very first. He recovered and the Conference in 1904 gave him a charge. He never felt better, although he has very heavy work and does a great deal of camp meeting work. I am so glad we took your advice and gave him the medicine, and feel that I ought to let you know of the wonderful good results from its use."

Milner, Ga.

This proves what Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy will do. Get a bottle from your druggist and take it according to directions. It does not matter whether your heart is merely weak, or you have organic trouble, if it does not benefit you take the empty bottle to your druggist and get your money back.

Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER"—with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

Obituary

Roda Millard nee Alwood, daughter of Royal and Catharine Millard, was born in Manamora, Ohio, Dec. 25, 1853.

She came with her parents to DeKalb county, Indiana, when a small child where she grew to womanhood, and was married to John M. Alwood, June 30, 1872. To them were born ten children, six sons and four daughters, two sons preceded mother to the spirit world.

Sister Alwood was converted and joined the United Brethren church at Zion class about sixteen years ago and later her name was transfered to Butler class where she was a good and acceptable member at the day of her death, which occurred at her late home on Walnut street, Butler, Indiana, August 14, 1909, at the age of 55 years, 7 months and 19 days. She was a devoted christian, a faithful companion and a loving mother.

She leaves to mourn her departure a companion, four sons, Charley, John G., William and Perry, all of Butler, four daughters, Mrs. Ada Heller, of Hamilton, Ind., Mrs. Ida Showers, of Auburn, Ind., Mrs. Elizabeth McConnell, of Danville, Ill., and Miss Minnie Alwood, of Butler, Ind., also twelve grandchildren, three sisters and a large circle of relatives and friends.

The funeral was conducted from the United Brethren church in Butler, Tuesday at 1:30 p. m., conducted by Rev. O. B. Wells, assisted by Rev. W. F. Parker. Interment in the Butler cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our sincere thanks to the neighbors and friends who rendered their services during the sickness, death and burial of our beloved wife and mother. We desire to especially thank the choir and those who tendered the floral offerings, and to all who assisted in any way.

JOHN ALWOOD AND CHILDREN.

Church of Christ Items

The combined services last Lord's day morning was a decided success. The same kind of a service will be held again in the near future.

We are anticipating great things for our anniversary service the first Lord's day in September.

The themes of the sermons this week will be: Morning—"Saints in Wrong Places." Evening—"The Unpardonable Sin."

The Centennial committe has supplied us with some 500 gummed stickers. The figure is the Coat of Arms of Pittsburg, the place of the Centennial convention. The design is wrought in black and gold. The four panels contain miniatures of Alexander and Thomas Campbell, Walter Scott and Burton Stone, all you want of them for the asking. Use them freely on all your correspondence.

It is hard to estimate the far reach of our influence. Every man of us contribute much more to the weal or woe of the human family than we anticipate. As a parent in the home, a townsman in the community, or a citizen of the state and nation, we either abuse our powers and privileges and in so doing cast a blight over the lives of others or we use them rightly and in so doing make other lives brighter and happier.

Owing to an unusual amount of advertising a lot of valuable reading matter was crowded out of this week's issue.

JUDGE O. N. HEATON VISITS KENDALLVILLE

(Kendallville News.)

Judge Owen N. Heaton, of Fort Wayne, arrived in Kendallville Saturday afternoon in a special car over the T. & C. I. lines in company with Manager A. J. Purinton and Superintendent Harry Fraser, on a trip of inspection. In addition to being spoken of as a possible candidate for the republican nomination for congress, Judge Heaton is also judge of the superior court which has jurisdiction over the receivership of the T. & C. I. It was his first trip over the road since it went into the hands of the receiver.

VETERANS OF THE 44TH TO MEET AT FORT WAYNE

All Day Meeting for an Old Time Visit---No Camp Fire

It is at Fort Wayne, on Friday, the 27th instant, that the annual reunion of the Forty-Fourth regiment, Indiana infantry, volunteers, is to be held this year, according to an official announcement received from Frank W. Wilson of Waterloo, the secretary.

"It has been found necessary to change the place for the meeting in our annual reunion," is the official announcement, "from LaGrange to Fort Wayne, which is the most central point in the old tenth congressional district."

Officially the program of the reunion is to be as follows:

This will be an all day meeting, for an old time visit by the comrades and no evening session or camp fire.

On arrival comrades and their guests will report at once to headquarters in Sion S. Bass post hall, opposite the postoffice on Berry street, register and receive badges.

At half past ten o'clock will be the first business session. Annual address by the president, the Hon. John J. Gillette, or Vice President John H. Hoffman. Appointment of committees. Reading letters from absent comrades. Report of committee on obituaries.

There will be no free entertainment. Good meals can be obtained for twenty-five cents or less for each person.

SECOND BUSINESS SESSION—1 P. M.

All unfinished business.

Short talks from comrades.

Report of all committees, secretary and treasurer.

Discussion of plans for future meetings, place and time of holding same.

Disposition of funds of the association.

Sociable hour in which old comradeship will be recalled, scenes and incidents of the civil war.

Army songs and a few recitations will add to the variety of the entertainment, but the purpose is to have a soldier family reunion for friendly council and renewal of acquaintances.

Some official suggestions are as follows:

Owing to the fact that our ranks are rapidly thinning out by the final muster and that the infirmities of age makes it impossible for the comrades to entertain the reunions as formerly, it has become necessary to make this new departure from established customs.

Fort Wayne is a very central place to meet and accommodations are more easily secured. With the steam and interurban roads it is possible to reach the city at any hour of the day.

Comrades from LaGrange county can secure accommodations at least from Rome City on the early cottagers train of the Grand Rapids & Indiana. From Steuben county the comrades will be a little late in arriving. From other directions the interurban lines will accommodate all.

Comrades, if you can't be present in person, send us a letter, showing you are with us in spirit.

Those desiring a badge should send twenty-five cents to cover costs.

Secretary Willis reports the following deaths for the year:

Company D—James Dallas, January 8, 1909, Wolcottville, and Albert Jackson, April 5, 1909, Hicksville, Ohio.

Company E—Captain O. P. Koontz, December 15, 1908, Bluffton, and R. H. Weamer, honorary, Hudson.

Company F—John H. Smith, June June 20, 1909, Butler.

Company H—Captain Jacob Newman, June 23, 1909, LaGrange, and James Tuck, June 16, 1909, Wolcottville.

Company K—James Miller, June 11, 1909, Waterloo.

Captain E. O. Rose and Captain M. B. Butler at the morning session will deliver the eulogies on these comrades who have died since the last annual reunion.

There will be no services at the U. B. church Sunday on account of the joint meeting which is announced in another column.

BUTLER NEEDS MORE FACTORIES

If the people who represent the moneyed interests of our town would so determine, a factory could be secured inside of thirty days. Angola, a town with one little jerk water railroad, has secured a large factory from Detroit. How? By hustling, by donations from the citizens. True, Butler has some factories, but we ought to have more. There is no denying that Butler is the best located town on the map for manufacturing industries. You say it's been tried. Suppose it has—should we stop at that? Anyone with ordinary sense will say no.

Every town of any size has been in the same position that we are. They tried, got stung and then tried again—that's the experience of every man who has ever accomplished anything for himself, and it's the history of every town that has grown to any importance. We do not need to tell our citizens this, they know it. But the HERALD is going to keep the factory proposition before the people, and every one you pick up from now on will contain something about factories, or employment for our people. So if you do not want to hear about factories you might as well stop your paper now. We do not want anyone to do that, however, we want every loyal citizen to think seriously in regard to this matter.

Kendallville is securing a new factory, Waterloo is after them, and when we have all the advantage over these places, why can we not do something too?

Since writing the above, J. D. Wilcox tells us that he has a concern spotted which manufactures cement block machines. They ask no bonus, but want a location.

A Letter From the West

Dakota, Aug. 4, 1909.

EDITOR HERALD,

Dear Sir—After leaving St. Paul at 10:30 p. m., we woke up and found ourselves west of Fargo to behold the great wheat fields we had so often heard of. Very little wheat is cut, some will not be fit to cut for about a month. We passed some large fields of flax that looked fine and will go 20 bushels to the acre at least. We ran through good fertile country all along till we came to Medora. Here the Dakota bad lands begin. Crossing the river we seen the ranch on which Theodore Roosevelt got his experience as ranchman to Herder. These bad lands are not as bad as I had expected to see. There were cattle on these bad land ranches fat enough for marketing and were good blooded stock.

After leaving bad lands which were about thirty miles wide, we came into as fertile country (which is called Golden Valley) as I have ever seen in all my travels. Here we had the opportunity to see the first steam gang plow at work. This makes our mode of plowing look very slow. Had the opportunity to meet a gentleman who deals in large tracks of land. He said that not more than six years ago this Golden valley was not settled at all, (only about 20 to 30 miles a ranchman's cabin) now the land sells at $30 per acre, and there are some very thriving towns now in this valley.

August 5, 1909, we arrived at Livingston. Early this morning we take branch of main line N. P. R. R. to Gardenier to entrance of the Yellowstone.

F. W. SWANTUSCH.

A. Fulmer and wife left Thursday for Buffalo and Niagara Falls. They will be the guests of their daughter.

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

The DeKalb county circuit court resumed its sessions on Monday, and will continue the term until Sept. 4. The jury, however, will not be called until Monday, August 23, when five cases of a criminal character, against former Councilman A. P. Moste, of Garrett, for the illegal sale of liquor, will be called.

During the same week the case of the state vs. Henry Gump is set for hearing. The next week there will be two criminal cases, one against John Julius and one against Tillie Kerns. All these criminal cases are to a jury.

The cases to the court during the first week of this adjourned term are: G. E. Bursley et al vs. Louis H. McInterf and the Ginder drain remonstrance.

The Ginder drain trial was begun in the circuit court Monday, and will probably be a long drawn out contest. E. B. Dunten of this city represents the remonstrators and Rose & Link, of Auburn, are representing the petitioners.

For Sale

The following automobiles at a great sacrifice: A 12 passenger Auburn bus, just the car to run a passenger business to Hamilton and take in the fairs. One Olds with front hood painted white, only $275. Also one in a one running order for $100. One 5 passenger four cylinder Mitchell with top and fully equipped. Ten Hurt in Hotel Wreck.

Explosives stored in the basement of the Wirick Moving & Storage Company's five-story building at East Twelfth and Walnut streets in Cleveland, Ohio, let go, wrecking the structure and setting fire to it. Several other buildings in the neighborhood burned. Seven men and three women were injured, and the property loss is estimated at $100,000. Several of the injured may die. The Pontchartrain Hotel, occupying three top floors of the building, burst into flames. About fifty guests fled, four men being overcome by smoke. They were taken to hospitals. The explosion blew out the front of the first floor of the building, hurling fragments across East Twelfth street and breaking windows in the Walnut street block. Pedestrians upon the street were slightly injured by falling bricks, hurled high in the air. Two or three others were slightly injured by a runaway horse, frightened by the explosion.

Mother's Awful Crime.

Mrs. Marie Handsel committed suicide and at the same time asphyxiated her three boy babies at her home in Chicago, Ill. She had carefully bathed and dressed her three children, one 4 years old and the other two 2 years old, carried them into the bath room, where she had closed the door, and turned on the gas. The gas awakened her husband, Joseph Handsel, and when he broke open the door of the bath room he found the four dead. The twins were wrapped in a quilt and placed in the tub while the elder boy was clasped tightly in his mother's arms. Mrs. Handsel had been ill for some time and apparently was able to get no relief. She leaves four other children ranging in age from 5 to 16 years.

A Big Lumber Fire In Alabama.

The big lumber plant of the Henderson Lumber Company at Sanford, Ala., was almost completely destroyed by fire despite the heroic efforts of the convicts at that point to stay the flames. Friction in the planer was the origin of the fire. Fifteen dry kilns, reaching over a distance of about one mile, were burned. About one million feet of lumber, in addition to eight carloads of timber, also burned. Two saw-mills and the convicts' quarters were saved. The loss will reach $250,000, only a small part being covered by insurance.

Two Drowned By Floating Over Dam.

Louis Fox, 34 years of age, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Cora Friedhoff, of Glendale, Ohio, were drowned in the Little Miami river at Foster's Crossing, twenty-five miles north of Cincinnati, in Warren County, when their row boat went over a dam. The bodies have not been recovered.

Boy Killed By Base Ball.

Benson Smith, 14 years old, was killed at Chicago, Ill., by a base ball striking him on the right ear. He was catching in a game and as he turned to leave his post the pitcher, Martin Bailey, let another ball go. The boy died before a physician could be called.

Bank Robbers Kill Marshal.

Two robbers, surprised while looting the State Bank at Keifer, Okla., shot and killed City Marshal Inford and probably fatally wounded Cashier Calmor Webling. They then escaped. A posse was quickly organized and hurried in pursuit.

Five Children Killed at Crossing.

While driving to church at Frisble Station, Mo., five children of A. H. Hyde, a farmer, were killed by a St. Louis and San Francisco train No. 11, which struck the wagon on a crossing a mile east of the Hyde home.

Son of Joseph Smith Dies Suddenly.

Arthur H. Smith, third son of Joseph Smith, who founded the Mormon church, is dead at Montrose, Ia., where he was attending the convention of Latter Day Saints. He will be buried at his home at Lamonia, Ia.

$200,000 Fire at Fort Worth.

Fire in the business district of Ft. Worth, Texas, caused a loss of $200,000. Among the losers are the Nash Hardware Company, J. Goldstein's clothing store and two restaurants.

Many Miners Killed in Mexico.

A score of miners are reported to have been killed by the fire which is destroying the Camella mine at Real Del Monte, in the State of Hidalgo, Mexico.

Pastor Resigns Long Service.

The Rev. R. H. Edmonds, for twenty years pastor of the Mayflower Congregational Church in Mansfield, Ohio, has resigned to accept a call to the pastorate of the First Congregational Church in Olympia, Wash., and will go to the new charge early in September.

Negress Burns to Death.

While attempting to light a coal stove fire with oil, flames spread over the dress of Mame Davis, 32, colored, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and she died within an hour.

SAYS THAW IS INSANE; BACK TO MATTEAWAN

Justice Mills Rules Against the Slayer, but in Strongest Decision Yet Made.

CALLS HIM A CHRONIC LUNATIC

Thaw, His Mother and His Sister All in a Collapsed Condition on Hearing News.

Harry K. Thaw was Thursday adjudged insane by Justice Mills in a decision handed down in the Supreme Court at White Plains, N. Y., and ordered to be sent back to the Matteawan State Asylum for the Criminal Insane immediately.

The order of Justice Mills was turned over to the Westchester County authorities by the Clerk of the Supreme Court and Thaw himself, in the jail at White Plains, was informed of the decision. Arrangements were made to take him back to Matteawan Friday.

Decides Thaw Is Insane.

Justice Mills' decision was the strongest against Thaw that has been handed down by any Judge since the two trials of the prisoner. His decision can be summed up as follows:

"That the insanity that Harry K. Thaw was afflicted with in June, 1906, the date of the shooting of Stanford White, was a chronic, delusive insanity, generally known as paranoia.

That Harry K. Thaw has not recovered.

That in paranoia recovery is very doubtful.

That the release of Harry K. Thaw now would be a danger to the public peace and safety.

Justice Mills in his decision finds that Thaw is now insane and unable to properly care for himself. The decision contained 3,000 words and thoroughly covered the insanity hearing that had been held before Justice Mills.

Thaw awaited the decision in his cell in the jail at White Plains. He was plainly nervous and paced up and down almost unnerved. Arrangements had been made to let him know the decision as soon as it was made public by the clerk of the court. When he learned his fate, Thaw stopped in his nervous walk up and down the cell and stood still. He did not seem to comprehend what had been told him. Then, when he realized that he must go back to Matteawan, he staggered backward and fell upon the cell cot. He covered his face with his hands and for a time could not be aroused.

Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, the prisoner's mother, and his sister, the former Countess of Yarmouth, were almost overcome at the news. Alice Thaw tried to comfort her mother, but the aged woman, who has battled so long and so untiringly for her son, showed plainly that the decision was a terrible blow to her and she is near a collapse.

ALABAMA FOR AN INCOME TAX

Resolution Adopted by Legislature Now Up to Governor.

The Alabama Senate's adoption of the resolution looking to an income tax amendment was without any eventful circumstances. Having passed the House and being approved by the Governor, it was adopted without a dissenting vote and will be signed by the Governor as soon as engrossed. Every line of influence and practically every man in the Legislature is for it.

FIND COAL FRAUDS IN ALASKA.

Ballinger to Begin Prosecution in Seattle Shortly.

Investigations that have been under way for some time—which have been laid before Secretary of the Interior Ballinger and Commissioner Fred Dennett of the General Land Office—will unquestionably prove one of the greatest scandals in connection with land fraud investigations ever brought to light by the General Land Office.

It is known that in the valuable coal fields of Alaska many thousand acres of land have been fraudulently filed upon and attempts made to force the department, through financial, political and even social pressure, to patent these lands. Secretary Ballinger and Commissioner Dennett have evidence showing unlawful combination of nearly 500 coal entries in Alaska. Commissioner Dennett, while in Denver recently, it is understood, said these entries would be canceled. To that end hearings will shortly begin, and the General Land Office has assigned its best coal engineers and lawyers to Seattle to aid in the coming trial.

Several railroad corporations owned in New York, Boston and Philadelphia are making indirect efforts to delay these land hearings, hoping that the next Congress will pass legislation to permit of greater consolidation of coal entries or else pass a curative act legalizing the entries about to be attacked.

ALABAMA TO BE DRYEST STATE.

House Passes Bill Prohibiting Sale or Shipping of Liquor.

In almost a frenzy the House members of the Alabama Legislature on Friday made a violent assault on the sale of intoxicants of all kinds, passing the Fuller bill, beyond question the most drastic ever offered in the South. By its provisions no liquors may be sold; no advertisement of liquors may appear in any paper or upon any billboard, and no train may leave a car that contains liquor upon any track. No place of selling any sort of goods may be called a saloon. Officers may raid any place under suspicion and destroy goods found. The presence of an internal revenue license, whether liquor is found or not, is prima facie evidence of guilt and the proprietor may be arrested.

FIRE LOSS AT SUMMER RESORT.

Thirty-six Buildings, Including Three Hotels, Are Destroyed.

A loss estimated at $1,000,000 was caused by the fire which swept thirty-six buildings from the main street of the summer resort town of Monticello, N. Y.

Three hotels filled with summer guests, mainly from New York City, were destroyed. They were the Rockwell House, the largest hotel in Sullivan County; the Palatine Hotel and the Bolsum House. All the guests escaped with most of their personal effects. The Monticello House was not burned. The Union National Bank, two newspaper offices and every store but one in the town were destroyed. The further spread of the flame was prevented by the use of dynamite.

BOY BANDITS ROB BANK.

Hold Up Cashier, Get $7,000 and Flee in Auto—Arrested.

Two young men, armed with shotguns and unmasked, walked into the Valley Bank of Santa Clara, Cal., shortly after 10 o'clock Friday, and, covering the cashier and his three clerks, demanded $7,000. After securing the money they fled in a waiting automobile, but were captured two hours later seven miles from town, submitting without resistance. The boy bandits appear to be under 19 years old. They are well dressed and apparently come from good families.

Mrs. Dionne got out of the house, but, returning to rescue a child, perished in the flames. Her body was found with the infant clasped in her arms.

NEW HEAD OF G. A. R.

Samuel R. Van Sant Elected Commander in Chief.

Former Governor Samuel R. Van Sant of Minnesota was elected commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. Thursday in Salt Lake City, over Judge William A. Ketcham of Indiana by a vote of 587 to 156. In addition to Commander Van Sant, the following officers were elected:

Senior Vice Commander—W. M. Bostaph, Ogden, Utah.
Junior Vice Commander—Judge Alfred Beers, Bristol, Conn.
Surgeon General—W. H. Lemon, Lawrence, Kan.

Mrs. Jennie L. Berry of Des Moines won the national presidency of the Woman's Relief Corps on the third ballot over Mrs. Belle Harris of Kansas by a vote of 213 to 90. The Flying Squadron Naval Association elected all its new officers by acclamation. For commander John C. Black was reelected, and lieutenant commander H. N. Rounds, of Rock Island, Ill. The army nurses, composed of survivors of the nurses who labored during the Civil War, elected as president Mrs. Mary T. Lacy, Salt Lake City, and as guard Mrs. Elizabeth Chapman, Illinois.

COM. VAN SANT.

The encampment ended at night with a fireworks display on Ensign peak.

By the close vote of 307 to 293 Atlantic City was chosen over St. Louis as the place for the next encampment, after a spirited fight.

The annual parade, the feature event of the encampment, gave Salt Lake City a martial aspect Wednesday. The Fiftieth Infantry, U. S. A., from Fort Douglas, took the lead. It was followed by the Utah National Guard and the carriages of the commander-in-chief and distinguished guests. Illinois led the States. Then came Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Ohio and the rest. The veterans marched down a street 132 feet in width past cheering thousands of spectators. At one point 1,200 school children in red, white and blue robes and caps formed a human flag. The flag joined the parade and followed the veterans to the starting place, where they passed in review before Henry M. Nevius, commander-in-chief.

It is expected that considerable confusion will result from a recent decision of Canadian bankers to oust American silver coins from general use in the Western provinces. All along the border the interchange of Canadian and American money has been common, no distinction being made. The people generally do not favor the move.

STREET CAR MEN AGREE TO TERMS IN CHICAGO

Presidents of Two Traction Companies Make Offer Which Union Leaders Call Good.

GAIN OF $1,000,000 IN WAGES

That Much Additional Pay for Employes in Three and a Half Years of Contract.

The wage dispute between Chicago's 10,000 street car employes and the surface traction companies, which a week before resulted in a vote to strike, was practically settled in a big joint conference of traction officials and union leaders Friday night, apparently to the satisfaction of everybody concerned.

John M. Roach and Thomas E. Mitten offered a wage scale to the men which representatives of the union said they would recommend to their respective organizations for acceptance. It was in the nature of a compromise agreement, applying to the employes of the Railways, City, Calumet and South Chicago and Consolidated companies.

Traction representatives, in company with Walter L. Fisher, representing the city, who was credited with the pilotage of the negotiations, estimated in round figures that the offer represents an aggregate additional expenditure in wages of $1,000,000 during the next three and a half years—the term of the proposed contract.

Terms of Proposed Contract.

The contract will run three and a half years, dating from Aug. 1, 1909, and to all old men who have served one year at 27 cents per hour—the old maximum scale—it will grant an immediate increase to 28 cents for the first year of the contract, 29 cents for the second year, and 30 cents for the last eighteen months.

To men who have been in the service less than one year the rate of pay proposed is the same as at present (23 cents for six months, 25 cents for six months, and 27 cents for one year) until they have served a year at 27 cents, when they will begin the climb which the old employes will start as soon as the contract is completed.

New men will progress at the maximum more slowly than at the present. The first six months of employment they will receive 23 cents; the second six months, 24 cents; the second year, 25 cents; the third year, 26 cents, and the last six months, 27 cents.

CALLS INHERITED RICHES EVIL.

Aged Millionaire with Large Family Leaves Wealth to Church.

Theodore Harris, the aged banker who died a few days ago in Louisville, leaving more than $1,000,000, left practically his entire estate to the Baptists of Kentucky. He left comparatively few cash bequests to his family, which is large. His blood heirs will have a life tenure in certain portions of his estate, enough to net them an income of $150 a month each.

In his will, written and signed on April 15, 1907, he provides further that should the beneficiaries he names die or become otherwise disqualified, the portion set aside for them shall revert to the estate as a whole and be paid eventually into the hands of the Baptist Church organizations.

The discrepancy between his bequests to the church and those to his own children he explains by saying: "The observations of a long life have taught me that inherited wealth is seldom useful to the one inheriting it, while, on the other hand, with the blessings of God, these benefactions will do good to thousands yet unborn."

SHOOTS JUROR; KILLS SELF.

Stranger Wounds Hotel Man Who Helped in Sentencing Him.

Daniel A. Fenton was shot and fatally injured on West Main street in Middletown, N. Y., at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Fenton, who conducted the Hotel Elberton, left his hotel about 2 o'clock. He was followed by a stranger, who tapped him on the shoulder and made a remark. Fenton looked at the stranger, turned and fled. The stranger fired a revolver from his pocket, but missed the fleeing man. He then took up the pursuit and fired two more shots. Fenton fell to the sidewalk and the stranger, after looking at Fenton closely, fired a bullet through his own brain. The stranger did not regain consciousness. On the way to the hospital Fenton said: "It was McSorley. I sat upon a jury that sent him to prison for a long term." Fenton has conducted hotels in San Francisco and Chicago.

Black Hand Demands $2,000.

Death of Dr. Hiram W. Thomas.

The Rev. Hiram W. Thomas, D. D., formerly pastor of the People's Church, Chicago, and prominent in civic life, died in Defuniak Springs, Fla., Friday.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The developments continue entirely favorable to increasing activity throughout the industries. The important basis is the strength derived from the rise in new demands for factory outputs and wider disposition to enter into commitments for future needs. Iron and steel production in this district now compares favorably with the best previous records. Construction plans denote considerable accumulation for railroads, manufacturers and mercantile houses.

The government crop report was as important a factor as expected, and its effect has created great encouragement throughout the productive and distributive branches. High absorption of breadstuffs and provisions is a notable feature, but live stock markets are yet without adequate supplies for packing.

Transportation returns show further recovery in freight handling by both rail and lake.

Money is slightly dearer and in strong request at the advance, rates for choice commercial paper being now quoted at 4½ to 5 per cent. Sales of local securities are double the volume at this time last year.

Dealings reflect much improvement in the cash markets for leading grains and flour, the buying being influenced by easier values and necessary replenishment after a long period of very conservative absorption. The total movements of grain at this port, 11,067,547 bushels, compares with 9,329,187 bushels last week and 9,828,205 bushels a year ago. Compared with 1908, increases appear in receipts 15.4 per cent and in shipments 9.3 per cent.

Bank clearings, $253,606,195, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 21.7 per cent and compare with $224,174,169 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 22 last week, 16 in 1908 and 22 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 6 last week, 3 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more manifest in general trade and industry this week, but there is still present the feeling of conservatism hitherto noted, which makes for small and frequent, rather than heavy individual sales. Developments have been largely favorable, chief among these the increased arrivals of buyers in most markets, a greater disposition to take hold for fall and spring delivery, a very favorable government crop report, the continuance of the marked strength in security markets, the growing firmness of the time money market.

The railroad situation is improving and idle cars are disappearing on the western lines as the winter wheat movement enlarges. Industries are active, iron and steel leading, with railroads reported buying freely of rails, cars and locomotives.

Collections show a little improvement, but as yet do not reflect the influence of new crop marketing, possibly because of the farmers being busily engaged. Building is active and trades catering to this line note rather more doing.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Aug. 12 were 219, against 184 last week, 249 in the like week of 1908, 146 in 1907, 143 in 1906 and 147 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 24, against 27 last week and 31 last year.—Bradstreet's.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank Leslie Publishing House

At this second snub, Mrs. Herbert seemed to find it harder work than ever to keep up her smile, but as he left the room she made a fresh effort.

"I am so glad to know your name, dear, for it sounds unfriendly to call you Mrs. James. Mathilde! What a pretty name! But not exactly English, is it?"

She spoke the word "English" as another might the word "holy."

"No, it's French," was the uncompromising answer.

"Oh, yes, of course. We quite expected you to be French, you know. Indeed, I was surprised when you spoke in English. I thought you would look so much more foreign."

Mathilde had gathered from her husband's manner a knowledge of what his game was to be, and wishing to play up to it, said, rather sharply:

"I am not French, but my mother was."

But Mrs. Herbert was not easily sat upon.

"Oh, aren't you really, dear? How nice, how very nice for me! I have been so nervous as to how we should get on together, because I couldn't at all fancy what you would be like, never having seen a Canadian; and now I see that you are just like any English person, and I daresay that although it may seem to you a little strange at first, you will soon feel quite at home among us."

Mathilde's patience was fast wearing out.

"Thanks. I don't feel at all strange. It all seems delightfully homelike," she answered, somewhat aggressively.

"How nice!" cooed the other. "And to think how I dreaded this meeting. It seemed on both sides to have such a shadow of death over it. First my dear husband, and then your sweet boy. How I have felt for you."

Her handkerchief was at her eyes now, and Mathilde began to find the situation intolerable.

The room was warm, the air heavy with the scent of hyacinths, and sitting in front of the fire with her big fur coat on, she seemed stifling.

She felt that the other woman meant to take her hand, and that she could not bear it.

"You are very kind," she said, with as much gentleness as she could bring into her voice, then rising suddenly:

"I really must take my furs off."

"You poor dear! How neglectful of me! Why you must be weighted down with that sealskin all this time! What magnificent fur! In England it would have cost a fortune, but I suppose that out there you get it for next to nothing."

Mathilde laughed, remembering the price which her father had last year paid a Montreal furrier for the coat, while it was evidently the lady's impression that South Sea seals were to be shot while walking about on the prairies.

CHAPTER X.

"These are your rooms," Mrs. Herbert announced a little later, as she threw open a door, leading from the upper hallway, in a tone which showed that she expected the newcomer to be overwhelmed with delight.

If Mathilde was overwhelmed it was not quite in the fashion anticipated, for dainty as the rooms were in their Louis Quinze fittings, they consisted only of a large bedroom, a smaller sitting-room and dressing-room. However, she bethought herself in time to conceal her dismay that she had better acquiesce quietly, and leave the matter in her husband's hands.

Mrs. Herbert had her surprise, too, for waiting in the bedroom was Jeanne, looking very placidly in possession.

"Dear me, who's this?" and under the influence of the surprise her voice became much more acid. "Did you bring a maid? I had no idea."

"Did you think I should not need one?"

The question, though amiable, did not increase Mrs. Herbert's amiability.

"Of course not, but I did not think that you would bring one with you, and had already looked out a nice respectable girl in the village."

Mathilde smiled. It was almost to the word what Stewart had predicted.

"How kind in you!" she retorted, "but I think that I prefer a French maid to an inexperienced village girl."

"French!" exclaimed the other. "I should not have thought that you were so used to French maids on the prairies."

"Wouldn't you?" the other answered, with a glance that was a danger signal.

As such her sister-in-law evidently read it, for, pulling herself together, she said sweetly:

"But I really must leave you to rest."

Hardly had the door closed behind her when (much to the amazement of Jeanne) Mathilde broke into a wild peal of laughter; but she soon quieted herself, and there was no sign of over-strained nerves, when, presently, Stewart knocked at the sitting-room door.

"You seem settled down," he said. "So they have given you these rooms," and he strolled to the other door, taking a comprehensive survey.

"These will do very nicely for you, and there is a big bedroom across the corridor that I shall take. I'll speak to Hutchinson about it," he announced coolly.

Mathilde sat silent, apparently busy in sorting over some bills and memoranda, the result of her London shopping.

"Well," he said, strolling back towards her, "and how did you get on with the sister-in-law?"

She laughed. "Much as you did, I fancy. She told me that as she had never seen a Canadian she had not known what to expect me to be like, and that she shouldn't have supposed that I was used to French maids."

"Dear creature! I hope you stood up for her."

"Oh, yes; I did not mind her," she answered carelessly, and then, seeing that he looked somewhat jaded, she asked: "How did you find your father?"

"Very much changed. It was rather a trying interview. He is very anxious to see you, but seemed too tired just now. I suggested that you should go up after you are dressed for dinner. Would that do?"

"Oh, yes."

"He was very kind about the little chap," he said in a low voice, and there was silence between them in the fire-lit room, but a silence not wanting in sympathy.

It was with a strange mixture of feelings that Mathilde sat, ready dressed waiting for her husband. She wore the same plain black evening dress as she had in town, with a beautiful spray of creamy roses across the front made the black less severe.

"Look at my offering from the head gardener," she said, pointing to the flowers as Stewart entered.

"Poor old Duncan! He was at the station to meet us. It's queer what a weakness old retainers have for prodigals." Then with an abrupt change of subject: "I see that you have on your pearl necklace."

"Yes, don't you like it?" she asked, wondering.

"Oh, yes; nothing could suit you better. But the poor, old father is possessed with the idea of handing over to you, without delay, the family jewels. He had the boxes all out on the table, and I think that it would please him if you were to wear some of them this evening."

He laughed with a touch of tenderness as he spoke of the old man, with the jewel boxes by him.

She looked up at him with startled eyes. "The family jewels! But surely, I am not the person to have them, Mrs. Herbert——"

He interrupted her: "Mrs. Herbert wore them when she was the heir's wife. Now she has nothing to do with them. You have taken her place."

"I don't wonder she hates me!" she said with emphasis. Then, with a sudden overwhelming sense of shame, "Oh, what must you think of me, accepting so much from you!"

James Stewart had once been told that he should have been a doctor, he had such soothing power over nerves.

"It's hardly wise to waste your strength on opening up that question just now. We are on the field of battle. It will be a victory for you to wear the emeralds to dinner to-night."

His treatment was wise, and her self-control was recovered.

"The emeralds!" she said; "I only hope they aren't very wonderful."

He laughed. "They are indeed. The necklace and aigrette are historical. The wife of Sir James the cavalier fled from him and from Orkwell for fear that he should let them go into King Charles' treasury. The bracelets are of later date, but considered nearly as valuable. Mrs. Herbert will be as green as they are when she sees you in them."

"But do you think it's fair?" Mathilde protested. He was not to be moved.

"All fair in war, and this is war, remember. It was not I who began it, and I am only fighting for my rights." His face had grown stern again as he spoke. "But we must not keep my father waiting. He said seven, and it struck just now. Will you come?"

Down a long corridor they went to a part of the house shut off by baize doors, hushed and still, with heavy curtains, and dim with shaded lights, where in an invalid armchair sat the helpless old man. There was nothing unattractive about the invalid; a rich down quilt covered his helpless limbs; his thin, white hands moved freely, and the clear-cut features that might have been carved in time-yellowed ivory wore a kindly smile.

As the door opened, the white head was eagerly turned towards it, and one hand was outstretched in anticipation.

"Come in, come in, Jem," said a feebly impatient voice; "come and let me see my new daughter."

The feeble old age and the word "daughter" touched a recent sore spot in Mathilde's heart, and with an impulse that was wholly genuine, she came swiftly forward, and kneeling by his chair, where the light from the shaded lamp fell full upon her, laid her two hands on his.

"Oh, will you let me be your daughter?" she said, with the pathos of her unconscious loneliness.

The old man gazed at her for a moment in silence, then he said, in broken tones, "My dear child, my beautiful child! James, why did you not tell me how beautiful she was? She is the right kind of mistress for Orkwell," and the pride of race strengthened the weak voice.

"I kept it as a pleasant surprise for you, father," the son answered; and Mathilde could tell from his voice how pleased he was.

With a sudden, shy fear that her impulse would have seemed to him but acting, she would have risen, but the old man said with a detaining grasp: "No, no, my dear, stay here in the light and let me see you. I want to see you in the family jewels. Jem, hand me the case with the emeralds."

What woman could suppress a word of admiration at the sight of that wonderful necklace, lying on the white velvet, with the aigrette reposing in the middle!

"Oh, how beautiful!" Mathilde breathed, and Sir James touched them with lingering fondness.

"Yes, Jem's mother wore them, fifty years ago, when she was presented. You must wear them at the drawing-room next spring. Put them on for her, Jem."

Then and there, Mathilde would have gladly sacrificed the necklace to have prevented that deep wave of crimson that dyed her face and neck at the touch of her husband's hands.

With the light streaming full upon her she was powerless to hide it, and she knew that Stewart must notice it, though he gave no sign, fastening the clasp with a quick, light touch.

"There, what a color it gives you!" the old man said, triumphantly. "Now, Jem, the aigrette."

This time she was prepared, and with a light movement was on her feet.

"Oh, let me do it at the glass. He will rumple my hair,' she said gaily, and he handed the ornament to her in silence.

When she turned from the glass though, he held a bracelet ready, and she put out her arm for him to fasten it on.

"There, father," he said, stepping back to view the general effect, "I think that I chose a wife to suit the emeralds. Shall we put them back in their cases?" he asked, watching Sir James intently.

"No, no," his father answered hurriedly, as though keeping his courage to the sticking point. "I want her to wear them to dinner to-night. I shan't be there, but I shall know how she looks, and shall think of the times when your mother wore them. The other things she can look at to-morrow. But, my dear," he went on with a timorous grasp at her hand, "you won't mind Flora sitting at the head of the table, will you? It wouldn't seem kind, would it?"

He looked up timorously at her, but showed instant relief as she responded warmly:

"Oh, no, I wouldn't dream of anything else."

"That's a good girl. A good girl," and he patted the hand he held. "Thank God, there are some children left me! My boy is gone, and your boy is gone. The children taken and the fathers left. God send us children in the old home again, my dear. The place is dreary without children's voices, dreary," and the scant tears of old age fell.

Mathilde stood there, decked out in her splendor, but with a fierce shame burning in her heart. The cold touch of the jewels on neck and arms felt like the material touch of her disgrace. But Stewart was quick to come to the rescue.

"We must not tire my father any more now. We will come in the morning." And with a tender good-night that soothed her heart, he let them go. They walked in silence some little distance before Stewart spoke:

"How can I thank you enough for your manner to my father. You have completely won him."

He had spoken with more feeling than usual, but Mathilde chose to think that he considered hers a successful piece of acting, and answered coldly:

"I felt sorry for him."

"Yes, I saw that you did," he responded, quietly. "But now comes the tug-of-war."

He had no fears as he followed her down the wide oak staircase. But as that couple of so goodly a bearing walked side by side up the length of the drawing-room, there were two surprises given.

Mrs. Herbert sat opposite to the door, and as she looked towards them, and caught the flash of the familiar jewel on that white neck, a cold rage came over her, and she stared helplessly for a moment before her face settled into calm, hard lines of spite. But hers was not the only suprise, for James Stewart was too much taken aback by the sight of a ghost to have eyes of appreciation for his sister-in-law's discomfiture.

His ghost was not outwardly alarming in appearance, being a small Dresden China shepardess sort of a woman, who in dainty tea-gown of pale blue and pink tints sat on the opposite side of the hearth from Mrs. Herbert.

In that soft pink-shaded light her aspect was that of a young girl, but even then a close observer could have seen that the apple-blossom skin had none of the freshness of youth, though the pale, fluffy yellow hair was evidently abundant and genuine.

Between the two women a tall, ascetic-looking parson was standing.

Mrs. Herbert, occupied in the task of pulling herself together, sat watching the newcomer's approach without speaking, but as they drew near the little group, a malicious light flashed into her pale eyes, and she began volubly:

"Oh, you must forgive me for not telling you that James would meet old friends to-night, but I quite forgot to say that cousin Nellie has been staying with us for Christmas."

"And you surely wouldn't have the heart to turn me out," came a light laugh from the Dresden China figure on the sofa, as she stretched out a welcoming hand over which numerous bracelets twinkled—then with a pretty tremulousness: "Welcome home again, Jem, and let me greet your wife as a cousin."

ON THE RAGGED EDGE.

In journeying through the "Bad Lands" of the West in 1876 in search of fossils Charles H. Sternberg encountered many perils. In a volume entitled "The Life of a Fossil Hunter" he relates the story of an adventure where a misstep nearly cost him his life.

One day the professor asked me to climb a point near the summit of a lofty ridge, crowned by two massive ledges of sandstone four feet thick, which projected over the steep slope like the window sills of some Titanic building.

These ledges, one above the other and separated by fifty feet of shale, had been swept clean for about three feet, so that I found an easy pathway for my feet when, after laborious climbing, I reached the lower ledge.

From my lofty perch I had a bird's-eye view of mile upon mile of the wonderful Bad Lands, a scene of desolation such as no pen can picture.

It was my duty to search every square inch of the dust-covered slope between the ledges for fossil bones. After much unsuccessful effort, I came to a place at the head of a gorge where a perpendicular escarpment dropped downward for a thousand feet. The upper edge of sandstone had broken loose for a space of thirty feet, and this huge mass of rock, four feet thick, carrying with it the loose dirt and polishing the underlying surface as it thundered down the slope, had struck the lower ledge with such force that it, too, had broken loose and plunged downward into the abyss.

A grove of pine trees at the base of the cliff had been crushed to the earth by this avalanche. To my view, the remaining trees, which I knew to be about fifty feet high, appeared like seedlings, and the vast mass of rock like a cobblestone.

I concluded that I should have no difficulty in crawling across the smooth space, for I reasoned that if I began to slip, I could drive the sharp end of my pick into the soft rock and thus stop myself. So, climbing up the slope through the loose earth to the base of the upper ledge, I started to cross.

When I was half-way over I began to slip, and confidently raising my pick, I struck the rock with all my might. God grant that I may never again feel such horror as I felt then, when the pick, upon which I had depended for safety, rebounded as useless in my hands as a bit of straw!

I struck frantically again and again, but all the time I was sliding down with ever-increasing rapidity toward the edge of the abyss, safety on either side and certain and awful death below.

To this day I do not know how I escaped. I suddenly found myself lying on the ledge, on the side I had left a moment before. Probably some part of my clothing, covered with dust as it was, had acted as a brake upon the polished surface. I lay for an hour with trembling knees, too weak to make my way back to camp.

To refuse to yield to others when reason or a special cause require it is a mark of pride and stiffness.—Thomas a Kempis.

Ways of Women

Wisdom and Innocence.

Some women have singularly airy ideas about banking accounts. There are even mature dames who do not know how to write a check. This failure to comprehend business is essentially old fashioned. The typical man of old prided himself on not allowing his wife any knowledge of affairs, so that, when he died she was confronted with a sea of complications which she did not know how to navigate, or else two unfortunate trustees were tacked on to the helpless ship in the guise of pilots and told to steer it into the port of safety.

Yet the situation, if absurd, was illogical, for you can not reasonably insist on your wife and daughter having at once the innocence of the dove and the wisdom of a serpent. Women should be allowed some knowledge of family business, or they should not be blamed when things go wrong.

The big crin hats, turned up at the side and trimmed with feathers, promise to be the ultra-smart millinery style for the summer, both in the black and the pure white.

Ideal summer hats are made of linen or Shantung silk to match the gowns with which they will be worn. The favorite shapes are those which have fairly high crowns and wide, shady brims, lined underneath with some contrasting tint and draped with a soft silk scarf, patterned with Paisley colorings.

More of what are known as "made hats" are being worn this season than for several years past. These are not confined to the dressy type, but round hats of the street and tailor made variety are fashioned of straw braid, sewed on a wire frame. While they are much heavier than the woven straws worn at present, they are more apt to keep their shape.

The round crowned, drooping brimmed mushroom hat of the babies grown to more imposing size is one of the most popular shapes for the girls from 6 to 10 and varies in width and angle of brim and in trimming. Many of the play hats in this shape have only a ribbon band and fluttering ends for trimming, but others are more elaborately trimmed.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Deep breathing has much to do with having a good figure. If the chest is flat and contracted, as must be if the lungs are not filled, a woman cannot make a good appearance.

The temperature of a heated bedroom on a hot summer night can be cooled if sheets are wrung out of water and hung between two windows. The evaporation will cause the temperature to fall several degrees.

Headache caused by fatigue or eyestrain can often be quickly cured if a wet cloth is lightly sprinkled with spirits of menthol and bound around the head. Lie down in a dark room and inhale the fumes. It brings relief almost instantly.

To make cucumber cold cream take juice of pressed cucumbers, one-half pint; deodorized alcohol, one and one half ounces; sweet almond oil, three and one-half ounces; shaping cream, one dram, and blanched almonds, one and three-quarter drams.

Scented milk for the skin is recommended by those who study beauty scientifically. The milk must be boiled and then a few drops of violet water added. The fluid must be rubbed into face, neck and arms thoroughly and permitted to dry. Then the rubbing must be renewed. To steam the face with hot milk makes it soft and white as an infant's.

Complexion Soap.

One of the best cleansers for the skin and excellent for pimples and blackheads is green soap. This has been long recognized as a healing agency and is less well known than it should be. Occasionally women complain that the soap makes them worse. The reason is that they use it too vigorously. Delicate, sensitive skin should never have green soap put on it full strength. It should be diluted with hot water and not used every day. Experiment until the soap lather does not make the skin feel drawn.

Ring Information.

"Rings should be chosen with discretion," says a woman who has made a study of the subject. "Few women, for instance, can wear a large solitaire diamond ring, which requires as a background the whitest of dimpled hands. The antique, old Venetian and marquise rings look best on thin hands with bony fingers, the sunken places below the enlarged knuckles requiring to be filled out with rings of a showy type."

Unusual are some of the French sheviots which show the Homan stripe effect.

A tablet has lately been placed in St. Helen's, Bishopgate, England, in memory of an old nurse, thirty-nine years in the service of the Wigram household.

A savings-bank account, with an opening deposit of 1 mark, is presented by the municipality to every baby in Schoeneberg, the aristocratic suburb of Berlin.

Mrs. Frank H. Snow, widow of the late chancellor of Kansas State University, has been granted a pension of $875 annually during her life from the Carnegie foundation.

Miss Paulina Roach, 18 years old, of Carthage, Mo., who graduated from the high school there, has a record of having never been absent or tardy during a school attendance of twelve years.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gerberding is president of the Woman's League of Justice in San Francisco, with 2,000 members, and she says women are to take an active part in the political campaign in that State.

Hygienic Dress.

On the subject of hygienic attire for women, there has always been a great deal of honest nonsense talked and much misspent trouble taken for the reason that a great number of people have the type of mind that irresistibly associates the ugly with the healthy and the nauseous with the wholesome.

Just as they think medicine cannot be efficacious unless it is thick and black and nasty, so they think women cannot breathe and prosper unless they look like a bale of hay with the middle hoop cut; and in pursuance of this conviction they refuse many of the alleviations of life, among which sugar-coated pills and well-made corsets should take high rank.

When looking at the portraits of the Spanish school of which Velasquez is master, one is constantly struck by the way the women seem to be confined in some barbaric instrument of torture, so flat are their chests and so narrow and tiny the uncomfortable-looking drawn-down waist. Surely no material less rigid than wood could be trusted to produce this invariable effect in women of all ages and degree. Now turn from these women of medieval days to a modern picture-gallery, and observe the freedom, the individuality, the graceful ease which, for the most part, the woman of to-day permits herself, and is permitted to contrast her with the woman of the by modern sanctions. Indeed, it is not necessary to contrast her with the woman of the middle ages. She is so much more comfortable and sensible in her dress than was her grandmother or even her mother.

So much has been done of late years to improve the corset that its reproach as a menace to health has, in fact, been wiped out. The best corsets no longer interfere with the breathing apparatus and many modern corsets leave the diaphragm free and support and restrain as they should. With their help and provided that skirts are not too heavy and dragging from the hips, women are often better off with corsets than without them.—Youth's Companion.

The next time baby screams with colic instead of dosing it with soothing syrups or old nurse remedies, such as catnip tea and other decoctions to which our grandmothers pinned their faith, try what hot water sipped from a spoon or taken through a bottle will do to relieve the pain. The water should be fresh and boiled, but not boiling. Care must be taken that it is not hot enough to burn the delicate tongue and gums. This will usually give relief and can be repeated frequently with no danger to the child.

For drainer and holder of nursing bottles tack a stick of round wood the size of a lead pensil, about eight inches long, with four inches protruding in a perpendicular position above the top of the wainscoting above the sink; then when bottle is washed turn upside down over the stick and leave to drain until ready for use again. If no wood above the sink tack a piece of wood five inches long, two inches wide and two inches thick on the wall and the round stick on that.

Russian Blouse Coming?

It is rumored that long coats may have their popularity challenged in the near future by the Russian blouse, for signs are not lacking that this old favorite is again to be brought forward. Examples of it have already been seen in broderie Anglaise lace and embroidered crepe de chine.

Value of a Good Walk.

A woman who walks well is a more helpful member of society because she has better health, says the Delineator. She is alert and alive, and finds all the world interesting. Then, too, the woman who has learned to walk gracefully finds a reaction on her nervous system. A new calmness and self-control show in her manner and face, and even more in her voice, for those delicate muscles which we call the vocal chords vibrate in harmony with the movement of the indivdual. And, free from self-consciousness, the graceful woman expresses her best self, for her every motion suggests dignity, kindness, reserve power, sympathy, and that most charming of all womanly attributes, graciousness.

Unusual But Good Style.

Ultra, but good looking, is this gown of white voile, embroidered in red and blue cotton in design as shown in model. Voile covered buttons are profusely used, and the sleeves and blouse are of silk batiste and lace.

Only Woman Voter.

The "Widow Taft," an ancestress of the President, was the only woman in Massachusetts allowed to vote in colonial days.

Fashion may be ruining women's figures, as Sculptor Caines says, but when in the history of civilization could any woman walk off with thirty pounds on her head and not even consider it exercise?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

WARM WEATHER FROCKS FOR CHILDREN.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Morning robes and teagowns are appearing without sleeves, except as they are made of contrasting material.

Foulards are made in such attractive designs this season that they can be used effectively in detached pieces.

Girdles will emphasize many gowns. The underarm seams are high and give smartness to the close-fitting sleeve.

Net is not used so much now as sheer batiste, finest tucked organdie and thin lawn, combined with fine Cluny or Irish lace.

A few years ago the little girl was dressed with numerous ruffles and so full were the skirts that a child dressed with all of the numerous ruffles looked for all the world like a fancy ruffled pen wiper. The dresses to-day are much straighter and the ruffles are not so full.

A pretty bordered foulard seen recently had a coarse-ribbed surface with a pattern of small groups of tiny dots on an ivory ground and a straight border of black on white, with touches of heron blue rhododendron purple, jade green and brownish purple, the effect being like that of a broad band of embroidery.

Learned How to Pack Trunk.

"I have the man who came for my trunk to thank for one thing," said a woman; "hereafter I think closing my trunk will have less terror for me. You see, I always seem to have it so crowded that it requires the combined weight of several members of the household to close that cover. Well, the other day, when it was time to take my trunk to the station, there we were, three of us, trying to get that trunk closed and locked. Finally, in sheer despair, I looked at the man who was patiently waiting and in a most appealing way, invited him to sit down upon that trunk to see if it could close it. Did he do as I suggested? No—something better. He calmly lifted up the top of the trunk, took out the top tray and fitted it in the top of the cover; presto, that cover with the top tray inside, went down as nicely as could be. I am not trying to explain why it did, but I know that it did. And, like a missionary, I am passing the idea along."

Good Washing Fluid.

For to make a good washing fluid, mix one box of lye, one and one-half gallons water, 1 ounce liquid ammonia, one tablespoonful of salts of tartar.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Ora Cox, employed in the cement plant at Stroh, fell from the upper floor of the building and only an intervening scantling prevented him from landing in a vat of boiling cement. His injuries are severe, but not fatal.

John Ellis, prominent Muncie man, had a premonition a few days ago that he would die very shortly—though then in good health—and set about arranging his business affairs. Later he was stricken by paralysis and is in a dying condition.

A large shipment of fish, the fifth to be made in the last three years, will arrive in Shelbyville during the week, and S. H. Morris will distribute them in Flatrock river, near Flatrock cave. The fish come from the United States hatcheries at Northfield, Wis., and are of the black bass variety.

While starting a fire with kerosene, Mrs. Edward Day, of Boonville, was seriously injured by an explosion. The blazing oil set fire to the house and Mrs. Day's clothing. While saving his wife and children, some of whom were badly burned, Day had his arms blistered. The house and contents burned to the ground.

On his arrival at his home in Lafayette from the Philippine Islands, where he has been stationed as an army surgeon for four years, Dr. Lewis R. Thompson found a communication from the government authorities offering him a promotion to the rank of captaincy with an increase of $500 a year in salary. Dr. Thompson now ranks as first lieutenant.

The funeral of the 3-weeks-old twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Bruner took place last week from their home near Lawrenceburg. They were buried in one coffin in the Riverview cemetery. The babies when born weighed 3½ pounds each, and died at the same time. The mother, who has just reached her sixteenth year, is in a critical condition and her recovery is doubtful. The father is 20 years of age and is an employe of the Aurora Brick Company.

A year from now Cass County farmers will not break their necks gazing at the tall buildings when they go to Indianapolis or Chicago, because Logansport is going to have a skyscraper. It is to be ten stories high and probably will be the highest building in the State outside of Indianapolis. A corporation is now being formed to construct the building, and it will be located at Fourth and North streets, directly opposite the courthouse. Building operations will be started early in the spring.

Celia Wade, little daughter of Floyd E. Wade, a well-known farmer near Oakland City, was attacked by an eagle while digging potatoes in the garden near her home. The child was suddenly swooped down on her. The little girl was brave and fought with all her strength. The eagle was driven away several times by the child, but would renew its attack when she attempted to leave the garden. Mrs. Wade finally heard her calls for help and succeeded in driving the eagle away. The child's clothing was torn by the eagle's talons, but she was not injured.

That hornets and horses will not mix was shown at a picnic held at Mineral Springs, Bartholomew County, when Charles Dinkins, a farmer, hitched his horse to a tree and prepared to enjoy the picnic. In a little while the horse became frightened, broke loose and ran away. The animal made a dash for the dry bed of a stream, which runs near the picnic grounds, and was bumping the vehicle over boulders when it jammed on some rocks. Just under the buggy was a hornet's nest. The horse struggled to pull the buggy on, but could not budge it nor could the animal break away. The hornets came out to investigate and took their spite out on the horse. Several men, who had followed the runaway horse, came to the rescue and they were liberally stung when they released the buggy.

Carl Smiley, aged 20 years, of Washington, died of a wound inflicted by a playmate nine years ago, when the latter pointed a rifle at his head and did not know it was loaded.

Vetal Bouchie, who observed his ninety-ninth birthday last February, and who is the oldest man in Vincennes, enjoyed an automobile ride a few days ago. He was a guest of Major William Penn Gould. The aged man expressed himself delighted with automobiling.

Mrs. Nancy Toon, aged 103 years, of Linton, and who is probably the oldest person in Southern Indiana, fell, and broke her leg above the ankle. The attending physician says her recovery is doubtful, owing to her advanced age.

Near the home of Thomas Knight, north of Owensville, two quail, a male and a female, are sitting on separate nests of eggs and the probability is that both birds will hatch a family of little ones. The nests are located about fifty feet apart. The quail do not fly away when any one approaches.

James Walker caught a forty-seven-pound catfish in White river, a few miles below Columbus.

Three hours after William Eddington, of Genoa, Ill., bought a restaurant in Logansport it burned up, including in the damage all of Eddington's personal property and endangering adjoining property worth $100,000. When the new proprietor for the first time lit the gasoline stove there was an explosion.

While rendering the play "A Wasted Life" in the County Hall at Mitchell the leading man in the Shafer Mack Company was accidentally stabbed between the shoulders. It was at first thought he would be off the stage for the evening, but he went through with the play. It is not thought the injury will prove serious.

The bulletin of the State Board of Health for June shows a death rate of 11.1, against 12.2 for June, 1908. The total number of deaths in June was 2,507. The death rate in the cities was 13.8, which was a slight increase over June of last year. Evansville, with a rate of 19.1, had the high record for deaths during June.

The M. P. church at Morristown is being remodeled, and while workmen were digging a trench they struck some deer horns. They were several feet from tip to tip and were in a good state of preservation. They had probably been in the ground sixty years. The church is fifty-four years old, and they were there before it was built.

Mrs. Johanna Loer, a pioneer of New Castle, has the distinction of having lived to witness and participate in the golden wedding anniversary of her daughter. Mrs. Loer is past 90 years of age. She has spent nearly all of her life in New Castle and vicinity. The daughter in whose golden anniversary celebration she participated is Mrs. Harvey Davis.

A curiosity in the form of a chain of crawling caterpillars was seen at the home of James Conns near Milton. The caterpillars were in procession and so close together that they seemed like a solid line. Their formation resembled the double head of a snake and had the curves of a serpent to the length of two feet. Mrs. Conns discovered the caterpillars and called her husband who separated them with a stick.

David Coble, aged 94 years, one of Wabash's oldest pioneers, was killed by a street car. The aged man sat down on the track to wait for a car and fell asleep. Five minutes later the car approached. The motorman did not see the man because of a curve until within a few feet. Coble did not hear the gong, and the car struck him, cutting off one leg and an arm. He died while being taken home. Despite his years Coble was an active man and spent some time every year hunting small game.

There is a pig on the farm of Thomas Knight, north of Owensville, that walks on its front feet. It never pretends to walk like an ordinary pig, although it has four feet. The hind feet, however, are deformed and the chances are that the animal will never be able to use them. When the pig desires to be present with other barn yard companions at feding time, it simply lifts its hind feet clear off the ground and starts out walking on its front feet with perfect ease. Naturally the pig is a great favorite with the Knight family.

Cases of animals adopting other than their natural offspring are often reported, but a case far out of the ordinary is that of a mare taking a calf and raising it as her own. In the pasture land of John Campiln, near North Salem, is a mare and her colt and a spring calf. The calf, not satisfied with the lacteal fluid supplied by the farmer, gets an extra portion by robbing the colt of its just share. The mare at first resisted the calf by kicking it, but later became reconciled, as the nervy calf became more insistent. The mare, colt and calf are now living in the pasture on the best of terms.

Mrs. Elizabeth Lux, who lives near Shelbyville, holds a record which is not equaled, probably, by any one in Indiana. About fifteen years ago her husband, John Lux, died. He owned a farm of almost 300 acres, but which had a mortgage of $7,000 on it. He also left ten children to be cared for. But this did not discourage Mrs. Lux. She took charge of the management of the farm until the mortgage was canceled. This was before any of her children had reached the age of 21 years. When the first one attained his majority she presented him with $1,000. She continued to do this until the last one, Edward, became of age. He has just received $1,000. Two years ago last Christmas she presented each of her children with $600. She recently sold her large farm to her son, George, for $19,675, George paying cash for it.

While playing Indian around a bonfire with several companions, Lorena Kuntz, aged 9 years, of Evansville, fell into the fire and was so badly burned about the face and hands that she will die.

A sunflower is growing on the top of Masonic Hall at Milton. The stalk is six feet high and in full bloom. It is supposed that sparrows carried the seeds and dropped them on the top of the building, and that enough dust accumulated to nourish the growth.

Owing to the fact that the farmers and their wives are busily engaged in harvesting, the butter supply in Decatur has been exhausted, and the citizens are clamoring for butter. Farmers' wives are making only enough for their own use.

William, the 4-year-old son of Nathaniel Squibb, junior member of the W. P. Squibb Distilling Company, of Lawrenceburg, was operated on for appendicitis and is recovering. A small pearl button that had been accidentally swallowed by the child, was found in the appendix.

Bad Backache

Such agonies as some women suffer, every month, from backache!

Is it necessary? No. It can be prevented and relieved, when caused by female trouble, by taking a medicine with specific, curative action, on the female organs and functions, which acts by relieving the congestion, stopping the pain and building the organs and functions up to a proper state of health. Try.

Ten Doctors Said He Would Die

"In 1903 we wrote you regarding my husband, who was suffering from heart trouble. He was superanuated by the North Georgian Conference. Ten doctors at different times said he would die. You advised Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Restorative Nervine; we did as advised, and improvement was apparent from the very first. He recovered and the Conference in 1904 gave him a charge. He never felt better, although he has very heavy work and does a great deal of camp meeting work. I am so glad we took your advice and gave him the medicine, and feel that I ought to let you know of the wonderful good results from its use."

Some of our readers may have the idea that the manufacture of brooms in Butler is a thing of the past, but it isn't. Frank Smith is buying every bit of broom straw he can find and making it up into brooms. The scarcity of broom corn however crippled the industry to a certain extent, but brooms must be had—there's nothing to take their place, although the price will be very high until there is a full crop of corn. Do not imagine you are getting held up if your dealer asks you a big price for your next broom.

The street paving talk doesn't seem to bother John S. Lowe very much. He has bought a lot on Main street, and the ground was broken last week for a fine dwelling, just east of the Methodist parsonage. Mr. Lowe is one of our best citizens, and his confidence in Butler at this time is noteworthy. Let others follow.

The mortuary record for the city of Butler for the past twelve months has been unusually low. In fact the number of deaths in Butler for the last three years is below the average. This indicates to us that it is a healthy town as well as a peaceable place to live. Those who wish to see a ripe old age and enjoy life will not miss it by locating here. We have excellent water and no pests—the best sewer system in northern Indiana, and neighborly neighbors, good schools and churches, surrounded by a fertile country. What more can be wished?

We want to say to the many satisfied customers of Mutzfeld & Sons that they will continue the harness and buggy business on a larger scale than ever, and that the same honest and courteous treatment which has been characteristic of their store in the past will be continued in the future. By selling out the heavy machinery they are able to carry a more complete line of buggies, harness, robes, whips and horse furnishing goods, and can better care for the repair work which is on the increase. The HERALD extends its best wishes for both the old and new firms.

The coming of Gorton's minstrels to the Thompson opera house, Friday, August 20, insures to its patrons a fine entertainment with some of the best special attractions ever seen on the minstrel stage. The singers, comedians and expert specialists engaged with this company are leaders in their various lines and the best that can be procured. If one may judge by hearsay, the entire performance is just about the "best that ever happened" and Gorton's company has come to be known as the show that "always makes good." Don't miss the fine street parade and concert at noon.

There were 1,050 entries in the baby show held at Robinson Park, Fort Wayne, Thursday. There were prizes for the prettiest baby, the finest pair of twins, the fattest baby, the smallest baby, doll babies, baby carriages, go-carts and doll carts. Mildred, the daughter of Mrs. Paul Leidolf, of Fort Wayne, was pronounced the prettiest baby, and the twin sons of Mrs. Frybeck, Ossian, the finest twins. The attendance was large and as quick as the decisions were rendered the three judges had to skidoo to prevent the "outraged" mothers, a thousand of them, who "had finer babies than the prize winners," from dumping them into the river. An Irish baby easily won the prize for strenuosity.

Cheerful, yet living with a broken neck, "Teddy" William Peters, a survivor of the Quebec bridge disaster in August, 1907, arrived in the city last week from Cleveland, Ohio, on his way to Chicago. Peters was foreman of a construction gang on the bridge when by an accident 264 men fell into the river. Many of them were killed and others died in the hospital. Peters claims to be the only person who escaped. He fell a distance of 300 feet and nearly every bone in his body was broken. Peters is compelled to wear a leather support on his neck to hold up his head. Otherwise he manages to get along nicely. He travels much in his efforts to sell pencils and other small articles to support a family of two boys, his wife having died of shock following the bridge disaster. Peters served in the navy during the Spanish-American war, being on board the Baltimore and the Philadelphia. He is about thirty-six years of age. His home is in Allegheny, Pa.

MAIL ORDER GRAFTER NO LONGER MERRY

Postoffice Department Making Life Miserable for Nimble Witted Fellows Who Would Use Mails to Catch "Suckers," But in Spite of Eternal Vigilance on the Part of Inspectors Fakirs Occasionally Get By.

LIKE the lilies of the field, the mail order grafter toils not, neither does he spin. However, it doesn't follow that he is living easy. Quite the contrary, says the Detroit Free Press. These are troublous times for the nimble-witted gentry who seek to employ the mails as a medium through which to make gullible mortals part company with their money, and the strenuousness is becoming more marked each day.

Aroused to a sense of its duty in this direction, the government, through the Post Office Department, is engaged in the wholly commendable work of protecting the people against themselves and suppressing those thrifty individuals who would fatten off them. There is an astonishingly large number of men and women in all walks of life who need to be protected, too. Those who have made fortunes through questionable deals of this kind will tell you so in strict confidence, and will assure you that their victims came from no particular class, but represented all walks in life. A "bargain," fraudulent or otherwise, if properly presented, makes as strong an appeal to the educated man of affairs as it does to the one in humble circumstances, and mildy of means is as keen in the pursuit of something for nothing as her less fortunate sister.

The glittering inducements that once confronted the unsuspecting on every hand are not so much in evidence, however. Time and the Post Office Department, chiefly the latter, have worked changes, and the mail order business has been reduced to a point where it is decidedly prosaic. That is, it would be were it not for the attempts of an army of fly-by-nights to get past the watchful inspectors. This class serves to enliven the situation, and eliminates the possibility of those intrusted with the task of suppressing concerns of doubtful merit suffering from ennui.

The Old-Timers.

Not so many years ago any sort of an advertisement, however apparent the intent to defraud, was permitted to appear in magazines devoted to the mail order business and any other publications proprietors of the business saw fit to use. Everybody who knows anything about the game has heard of the dodge worked as long ago as during the civil war by an enterprising man who was reputed to have made himself rich thereby. Selecting the period when military service had been made compulsory, he inserted an advertisement in newspapers in various parts of the country stating that for $1, sent to him, he would tell the writer how to escape the draft. He was literally swamped beneath a shower of $1 bills from those anxious to know how this most vexatious problem could be settled. In due season they each received an envelope in which was inclosed the answer, the single word, "Enlist," being printed on a slip of paper. It was a certain way to avoid being drafted, but the advice wasn't followed in every instance.

Later came the men who for a like sum agreed to furnish you with a positive exterminator of bedbugs, roaches and similar household pests, together with full instructions regarding its use. Again the dollars poured in, and as fast as the mails could carry the reply back there went forth mysterious-looking little boxes. Opening one of these, the recipient found himself in possession of two flat pieces of wood, each possibly three inches long and two inches wide, whose actual value was but a fraction of a cent. Accompanying these were the "instructions," reading something like this: "Catch the bug, place him carefully on the upper side of the lower block, then put the lower side of the upper block on him and press tightly until he is dead."

The methods of these early operators may have been crude, but they managed to get away with them, and, what is more, came nearer fulfilling their promises than many of their successors. Another game worked extensively was by means of a cleverly worded advertisement announcing a special sale of sample silks, twelve different pieces being sent for 25 cents. It was expressly stated that only one order would be filled for any one person, and that the time in which these beautiful samples could be secured for such an unheard-of price was limited, as was the supply. Responses came from everywhere, and the jingle of 25-cent pieces drowned even the joyous chuckling of the artful promoters of the scheme. When those who had sent in their money received the twelve beautiful samples of silk they proved to be bits of floss about a foot in length, and absolutely valueless even for use in fancy work.

"There's a sucker born every minute," was the axiom coined long ago by a far-seeing mortal. That was good in its day, very good indeed. But it was much improved when some time later an observer of mankind—and some women—added, "and some are twins."

Little Chance for "Skin Games."

Strictly speaking, the offers mentioned were lived up to. In every case the agreement was fulfilled, and that was supposed to end the matter. The government thought otherwise, however, and proceeded to put those thoughts into execution. While every promise was literally carried out by those who had separated gullibles from their money, the advertisements were so worded as to be misleading. Taking cognizance of this, the post office authorities inaugurated a campaign that has been productive of results. From a "skin game" of the most flagrant type, the mail order business, which still thrives to an astonishing extent, has been reduced to a legitimate basis, and only those concerns whose propositions are well within the rigidly drawn lines laid down by the department are supposed to exist.

There was no limit to which these mail order grafters would not go in the old days.

No less brazen are the advertisements that occasionally creep through, offering a "thoroughly reliable timepiece" for $2.49, or whatever price may be charged. When it arrives, the recipient discovers that he is the possessor of a sun dial put up in a cheap case to resemble a watch—actual value, 29 cents.

There are scores of other schemes sprung, but they seldom get further than that. Almost before they appear, the columns of the mail order magazines are scanned by post office inspectors, and every offer that looks the least bit suspicious to the trained eyes of these men is investigated forthwith. If found to be irregular, the individual or concern is put out of business at once.

For a stated figure you can each month receive from firms who make a specialty of this class of work lists of those engaged in the mail order business all over the country. Comparing the current list with the one of the previous month, you would find that possibly 10 per cent of those mentioned were newcomers. If all these were to be answered in the return mail you would in the course of a few days get back at least 10 per cent of the letters sent out, with the word "Fraudulent" stamped across the face of the envelope. That is as far as most of these concerns get, the post office authorities closing them out before the returns on their first advertisement begin to come in. Even if they get by safely the first month, the second advertisement does not appear, and they are listed among the undesirables.

The Straight Business.

With the elimination of the grafters the mail order business has settled down to a conservative basis, in reality representing the highest type of salesmanship. It is devoid of personal contact with the purchaser, that most important element, and sales made under such conditions can truthfully be regarded as achievements. For the most part the firms advertising sell high grade goods at good prices, often on the installment plan.

This change has come as a result of the activities of post office inspectors, who are constantly on the alert and unrelenting in their pursuit once they strike a lead. The daily papers, the magazines and other avenues of getting in touch with the public are closely watched, and everything that even savors of irregularity is squelched.

WESTON'S GREAT WALK.

The Wonder Is that He Should Have Finished His Trip at All.

That Edward Payson Weston should have failed in his attempt to walk across the continent in 100 days is not so surprising as the fact that he should ever have attempted the feat. It is one that many a younger and more vigorous athlete would have hesitated at, and yet this man of 70 years sets out undaunted, in the bleakest and rawest of weather, to accomplish something that would test the metal of the hardiest. And he failed by only the merest margin. If he did not accomplish his self-appointed task, that which he did accomplish will long stand as the record of what a man of his years can do.

Writing of his trip across the continent, Mr. Weston said: "I contend I walked a distance of 4,000 miles in 104 days and 5 hours, and while it exceeds the distance between New York and San Francisco nearly 700 miles, and far excels any previous record, yet technically it is a failure, and I do not feel inclined to close my public career with a failure."

That the performance was technically a failure does not make it any the less remarkable. Let any young man try Weston's average rate of speed for a few days over good roads in good weather and he will catch the point.

EDWARD PAYSON WESTON.

The endurance test was a very severe one. There was a great distance to be covered as near as possible within the set time; there were storms and head winds; there were mountains and deserts to be crossed; there was excessive heat to be borne, and for many hundreds of miles the walking was done of necessity on railroad tracks. The feat required unusual physical strength and very exceptional will power, for it is obvious that the walker on such an excursion must keep to his work despite all discouragements or fall hopelessly behind.

Of course the public cannot be expected to become wholly absorbed in such enterprises, and apparently there has been less of a sensation over the long jaunt than there was over Weston's walk from Portland to Chicago in 1867 or his repetition of the performance forty years later.

THE NEW DIVORCE CENTER

Reno, Nevada, Inherits the Sioux Falls Industry and Gains a Million a Year Estimated Revenue.

THE CAPITOL AT RENO, NEV.

THE population and social life of Reno, Nev., are undergoing a great change, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger. Where a year or so ago the optimistic mining promoter, in his corduroy or khaki and his high russet shoes, was wont to disport himself, to-day may be seen men of the East flashing by in high-powered automobiles. Where Washoe squaws would a year ago sit and play cards at the corners of the public squares may be seen to-day handsome women in Paris gowns, sauntering in the afternoon sun. On the veranda of the leading hotel, where a year ago were the silence and desolation that the panic of 1907 produced, idly sit and fight with ennui groups of men and women, who look forward, in mental vision, to the time when they will be able to forsake this frontier post of civilization and whirl an eager flight back to their homes in the East. But they are looking for divorces at present, and so they must stay here for at least six months from date of arrival to satisfy the requirements of the Nevada divorce law with regard to residence.

The charms of Nevada as a divorce center have only just begun to percolate into the consciousness of the outside world. Reno has no objection to the present status of affairs. It is estimated that the revenue of the town from the divorce colony at present is close to $1,000,000 a year, and that it will rapidly increase from this on. To a community of but 18,000 population this is no small consideration.

Biased somewhat by the financial seductions of the situation, and yet to learn the lesson that such a state of affairs can only result in the moral degradation of the youth of the community—a lesson which caused South Dakota to reform her divorce laws—Reno appears to be perfectly contented with things as they are.

But Nevada is busily engaged in cleaning house, and it is felt by the most reflective observers that the divorce laws of Nevada as now written will be a thing of the past in the near future. Not in the very near future—for the next Legislature does not meet until January of 1911. There are others who point to the experience of South Dakota, which for twenty years fought the evils of lax divorce laws before a repeal was secured, and say that the moralists of Nevada have an equally stubborn task before them. But Nevada is cleaning house. In the last session of the Legislature, after gaming being permitted for forty years with cognizance of law, a bill abolishing gambling was passed—the act to take effect in November of 1910—and it is believed that if that could be done, the slack divorce laws can be more easily repealed.

SHACKLETON AND COMPANIONS AT THE "FARTHEST SOUTH."

HOISTING OF THE UNION JACK BY SHACKLETON AND PARTY.

Lieut. Shackleton, the British explorer, who recently returned to England after having reached a point nearer the south pole than ever was attained before, planted at that point a flag given him for the purpose by Queen Alexandra.

LIONS TERROIZE A CROWD.

Two full grown lions, running through the streets of St. Charles, Mo., scattered a carnival crowd in terror and emptied the big car shops when they were driven to bay in the shop yards. Showmen captured the lions an hour after their escape, and after one of them had fatally bitten a pony and the other attacked an elephant. More than 2,000 women and children were on the streets. Suddenly there was a cry: "The lions." Men, women and children turned and fled, none stopping long enough to see that the lions were not coming toward them, but had taken the other direction. In five minutes the streets were deserted. In the shop yards came a long combat of wits with the lions, and the showmen had it all to themselves. The men finally succeeded in catching the lions with lassoes and bound their legs. The animals were then placed in a portable cage.

NEARLY CRUCIFIES SELF.

Hanging from the interior wall of the new Illini Hotel at Alton by a nail accidentally driven through his hand, Rolla Perkinson, a carpenter, for a few moments nearly was crucified, suffering excruciating pain until relieved by fellow workmen. Perkinson was on a ladder nailing scantling with four-inch wire nails. As he struck a powerful blow at a nail he was holding in his left hand the nail slipped and was driven through the palm of his hand into the scantling. At the same instant the ladder upon which he was standing careened from under his feet and left him hanging. Perkinson's cries attracted four other workmen in the building. As he moved his body in agony the nail pulled free from the scantling and he fell to the floor as his friends entered the room.

Liverpool shipping returns for 1907, though covering the entrance of 3,359 vessels of 8,127,419 tons, do not list a single American ship, unless maybe some little odd one is included in "other foreign nationalities," four vessels aggregating 6,314 tons.

Then he kept count, and the number of strokes of the razor in shaving once over was 183. Of Turkish women a writer says: "Though a few of the better class speak a little English, and others, having learned French from their governesses, read the latest French novels, the mass of Turkish women cannot read or write even their own language—for they, like the majority of their men up to the present, have had no system of education. The secluded life they lead acts on their intelligence; not being educated themselves, they have not cared to educate their children, and, consequently, it will be some time before the ordinary woman can dispense with the services of the public letter writer, who is often nothing but an impostor."

George W. Coleman, the noted sociologist, discussed, during the recent sociological conference at Sagamore Beach, tips and tipping.

"I have a friend"—so Mr. Coleman concluded—"who belongs to an anti-tipping association. My friend, in obeying the rules of his society, has many quaint experiences. He went traveling in the west in the spring. He dined one night in a fashionable western restaurant and after paying his bill he gathered up the change that had been brought upon a silver plate, and dropped it into his waistcoat pocket. As he rose to depart the waiter said in a low, appealing voice:

"'Surely, you won't forget me, sir?'

"'No, no,' said my friend. 'I'll write to you.'"

Kidney trouble makes weak, weary, worn women. Backache, hip pains, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, languor, urinary troubles make women suffer untold misery. Ailing kidneys are the cause. Cure them. Mrs. Irene Tudor, 118 N. Clagg St., Bellefontaine, Ohio, says: "I thought my trouble incurable, as I suffered so long with kidney complaint. I had sharp, agonizing pains and serious urinary trouble. I was tired and depressed and nothing seemed to help me. Finally Doan's Kidney Pills brought relief and soon effected a complete cure."

ITINERANT MONARCHS.

European Rulers Who Travel on Diplomatic Missions.

It may be true that there is no east nor west when two strong men meet. But the meeting of Czar and Kaiser only emphasized the points of the compass and the subdivisions of geography by national and racial lines, says Collier's.

In the middle of June, at Pitsilas, on the Finnish coast, Nicholas and Wilhelm chatted about the future of Europe. Knowing that the Czar was planning a series of visits to President Fallieres, to King Edward, to the pope and Victor Emmanuel, and to one or more of the northwestern countries, the Kaiser inserted a call at the beginning of the imperial tour. It is believed that the German Emperor desired by his urgency to weaken the fellowship of Russia with Great Britain and France.

King Edward of England recently completed a pacifying tour, where his infallible tact was never in better oiled condition.

The theory of sovereignty used to be the static. "I sit, I teach," said the New England sage. And it was the old-fashioned idea of Kings that they were immovable on a golden throne. Seated like Javey, they dispensed justice from the center of rest. But today, to stay at the same point, they sometimes have to run at the top of their speed. A modern King is a bit of a commercial traveler.

The Sultan is said to have caught the idea, and packs his grip for a jaunt through Europe in the autumn of 1909. He will call on England in December.

BAD DREAMS

Caused by Coffee.

"I have been a coffee drinker, more or less, ever since I can remember, until a few months ago I became more and more nervous and irritable, and finally I could not sleep at night, for I was horribly disturbed by dreams of all sorts and a species of distressing nightmare.

"Finally, after hearing the experience of numbers of friends who had quit coffee and were drinking Postum, and learning of the great benefits they had derived, I concluded coffee must be the cause of my trouble, so I got some Postum and had it made strictly according to directions.

"I was astonished at the flavor and taste. It entirely took the place of coffee, and to my very great satisfaction, I began to sleep peacefully and sweetly. My nerves improved, and I wish I could wean every man, woman and child from the unwholesome drug—ordinary coffee.

"People really do not appreciate or realize what a powerful drug it is and what terrible effect it has on the human system. If they did, hardly a pound of it would be sold. I would never think of going back to coffee again. I would almost as soon think of putting my hand in a fire after I had once been burned.

"A young lady friend of ours had stomach trouble for a long time, and could not get well as long as she used coffee. She finally quit coffee and began the use of Postum and is now perfectly well. Yours for health."

STABS SHERIFF ON SCAFFOLD.

Refugi Jureque, sentenced to death for attacking Alvina Olenik, aged 15, a Bohemian girl, at Sutherland Springs last July, stabbed and fatally wounded Sheriff Wright at Floresville, Texas, when the sheriff started to fix the noose on Jereque to hang him. He plunged a sharp spoon handle in his executor just above the heart and attempted to escape. Jereque was seized by a deputy sheriff, dragged back to the scaffold and unceremoniously hanged without a black cap. It is not known how he secured the sharpened spoon handle.

TO ENCOURAGE YOUR HUSBAND.

Do not fail to tell him now and then that he has been hard up for money ever since you were married.

Ask him, every little while, "Why is it we never have anything like other people; never go anywhere?"

Do not forget to remind your husband often that your children do not dress as other children do; that the girls should take music lessons from the best teachers, and that they should have a first-class piano and other things to correspond.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND MUSICAL CULTURE

MUSIC in the public schools is a subject which may well be advocated by every musical organization throughout the country. A movement of this sort, outlined by Charles Farwell Edson, president of the Garnet Club of Los Angeles, is now on. It strikes at the root of all education in that it seeks to enlist the services of the public schools in behalf of music. Mr. Edson points out that 54 per cent of the children of the country are in regular attendance in the primary grades of the public schools. If they can be imbued with a love of good music and good pictures, our next generation will be a generation of art-loving people. He points out further that the stereopticon, the mechanical piano player and the talking machine bring to our very door the masterpieces of painting and music and the interpretations of the greatest musicians.

"With the three appliances named above in each high school in the country, we would have the center from which to attract the pupils of the lower grades to come and hear and see," Mr. Edson continues. "We would come in direct competition with the nickolodeon and the cheap theater, but with good stuff instead of poor, and given at cost, as we now give our things in the schools.

"The National and State governments are doing everything in their power to raise better horses, cattle, pigs, chickens, grain, fruit and farm produce of all kinds through the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington; the Secretary of Commerce does everything in his power to foster business in every way possible. The States send trains over the country teaching everything but love of the beautiful and then wonder why the people of this glorious land of ours are not more artistic. Are good people a less valuable community than clean hogs?

"We are proud of all of our successes but artistic, and it is time that we realize that we can do these things here as well as they do them abroad by using the same means. Art is world-wide and universal, and we of this country will have an art worth while when we demand it and support it the same as it is supported abroad.

"Our American singers are filling the European opera houses and our American students are going to Europe to study with American teachers. There is more chance to hear music in Europe, but a student can assimilate only so much at a time, and no matter what you hear, it is what you grasp and comprehend of it that counts, not how much you have listened to.

"Let us buy our art as we do other commodities and then we will get results. Opera in English is the thing to work for. Recitals in English the second and last, but not least, first-class music in the schools every day as the most essential thing of all, for from the schools will come our future audiences of lovers of art.

"Many of the Middle Western States are not negligent of their opportunities in the matter of giving their public school children some knowledge of music. In Dayton, O., it was my privilege recently to lecture before the 400 teachers of the public schools on the music dramas of Richard Wagner. In Richmond, Ind., similar work is being carried on. In both these cities this kind of study is not limited to the advanced classes; the work of the primary grades is made tributary and preparatory to it. Doubtless this intelligent and artistic consideration of music in the public schools of Indiana and Ohio has a very close relation to the very decided advance which those States show in point of musical culture.

Sugar Instead of Alcohol.

Indeed, the role and importance of sugar as a rapid reliever of fatigue is one which we are only just beginning to appreciate, and which goes surprisingly far already. It has been incorporated into the most hard-headed, cold-blooded, matter-of-fact diet on earth, the German army rations, especially the "forced-march" emergency ration. No other food of its bulk can take its place. It is the belief of careful observers of men, particularly in the tropics, that the larger the amount of sugar and sugar-containing foods they are supplied with the less alcohol and other stimulants they will crave. For instance, the United States Government now buys the best and purest of candy by the ton, and ships it to the Philippines, to be supplied to the canteens and messes, finding that its use diminishes the craving for native brandy; and it has long been a matter of comment from thoughtful observers that the amount of drunkenness of a race or class is in inverse ratio to the amount of sugar it consumes.—From Success Magazine.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

Whole Body a Mass of Raw, Bleeding, Torturing Humor—Hair All Fell Out—Hoped Death Would End Fearful Suffering—In Despair—Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered by whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony I endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

Catch Your City Young.

This is the advice of Franklin Clarkin, writing in Success Magazine. Three or four Iowans settled on a sandy beach in Texas to experiment with a city without taxes. As others joined them, the settlement formed a legal corporation—quite as the ancient Romans in Britain did—for the purpose of regulating domestic policy and administering powers of government; and as a means of checking up government by public opinion, the initiative and referendum was instituted.

After fourteen years Fairhope is thriving happily. Land is owned by the corporation, which is the community, and is leased to individuals for ninety-nine years. When one has paid into the communal treasury the annual ground rent of, say, $25 for his leasehold, $50 down for installing a telephone (if he wants one)—that is all the government exacts.

And in return for it there are three free schools; a water system without rates; a public dock; a library that is free without a Carnegie foundation; a telephone system with absolutely no charges within the county.

All these were established out of the surplus from ground rent, after paying the State and county taxes, and the cost of administration and improvements.

You see, according to this, there would be really nothing supernatural or miraculous about dividend-paying cities. Only an extreme sort of practicality. The main desideratum would seem to be that you must catch your city young, and thereafter protect it from private exploitation.

Sanitary Milk Pails.

Much the larger proportion of milk is carried in wide-topped, uncovered pails from the cow to the strainer, a distance of 25 to 100 feet, across a cowyard, under a hay loft, or past a manure pile, thus exposing a large surface of warm milk, which absorbs all kinds of undesirable odors and collects dirt and dust.

Galvanized iron is something used for milk pails, but it is not best, for the rough surfaces afford hiding places for bacteria. Wooden vessels should not be used for holding milk, for it is almost impossible to keep them clean. Besides imparting a metallic flavor to milk, rusty tinware is objectionable because it is impossible to keep it clean. Good tin is the only practicable material for milk vessels, and it must be kept shiny and bright.

DOUBLE PROTECTION. NO SPATTERING.

The most important thing in producing milk is to keep the dirt out. This can only be done by carefully grooming the cows and by using a sanitary pail, two of which are shown here. There are several types of these pails, but they all have the same principle. There is a cover with a small opening, under which is fastened a cheesecloth strainer. The one with the spout strains the milk as it enters the pail, and also as it is poured out.—Farm and Home.

Thistle as Stock Food.

Stock of all kinds greatly relish the plants of the Russian thistle, which has fairly jumped out of the ground since the rains, and our Eastern plains are verdant with it. Why not make hay of it? So palatable is the hay to cattle that they leave green pasture and break through fences to devour this obnoxious and outlawed weed if it is cut and stacked before the reddish tinge comes on to the plant, which occurs about the middle of July. Many of our Colorado people have used Russian thistle for forage for several years, and some of them say that it is as good as alfalfa. In a recent analysis the Russian thistle assayed as follows: Protein, 17.95; ether extract, 3.61; ash, 21.98; crude fiber, 20.14, and carbo-hydrates, 36.32. All over Eastern Colorado there is a lamentable shortage of protein feedstuff. Corn, corn stalks, straw, millet, Kaffir and prairie hay are all long on starchy matter, but short on protein. In the thistle we have a crop that grows on the arid reaches which will not only yield a large amount of forage, but a very palatable one at that, and a crop that is rich in the two elements in which others are deficient.—Field and Farm.

Saw Rats Freight an Egg.

After an investigation covering two weeks, William Krohbach of Danby, Pa., has learned the reason he has been receiving only two or three eggs a day from his flock of sixty hens, and incidentally found out something about the inventive capacity of rats.

One morning he heard a noise in his chicken house, and quietly making his way there, he saw two big rats in the act of making away with a newly-laid egg. One of the rodents was lying flat on its back with the egg tightly clutched in its four paws, while the other rat was dragging it along by the tail. Krohbach was so impressed by the sight that he watched the rodents for three minutes, during which time they carried the egg for twenty yards along the fence until they came to a hole in the ground, into which they took the egg. One of the rats became tired while carrying the egg and changed places with its fellow.

Ventilating Stables.

Horses and cows are in the stable at night for rest. When the weather is warm the atmosphere in close confinement becomes very warm and oppressive, so much so that the animals become very uncomfortable, and hence fail to get proper rest. The horse that does not get proper rest is not in a good condition for heavy work the following day, and the cow that does not sleep in a cool, restful place in hot weather will not give a full flow of milk. The temperature of the working or producing animal must be kept normal to give best results. If there are no windows in your stables, cut out a number now and let light and fresh air come for the health and comfort of the animals. There is nothing like plenty of good fresh air in living and sleeping rooms, whether the rooms be for the occupancy of man of for animals. This holds good for both winter and summer.

Grain Ration for Swine.

It is much the best economy to furnish swine a grain ration when they are on pasture, as it results in better gains and a better product. One man estimates that it takes from one-half to one-third less corn on alfalfa pasture than on a straight grain ration to make a hog ready for market. Many let the hogs run on alfalfa until about five or six months old, by which time they reach a weight of 75 to 125 pounds, feeding just a little grain; then they feed heavily for about two months and sell the hogs at eight months old weighing 200 to 220 pounds. One farmer, who raises about a thousand hogs a year and who in one year sold $11,200 worth, makes a practice of growing his hogs on alfalfa pasture until about eight months old, feeding one ear of corn per head daily. He then feeds heavily on corn for a month or two and sells at an average weight of 200 to 225 pounds. Another man feeds all the corn and slop the pigs will clean up, all the while grazing them on alfalfa pasture, and sells at six to eight months old at weights of 250 to 300 pounds. Another, who raises about a thousand head a year, feeds all the corn the pigs will eat, beginning shortly after weaning and continuing until the hogs are sold at ten to eleven months old, averaging 275 pounds.

Another farmer, from weaning time (two months old) until eight months old, feeds the pigs nothing but dry corn on alfalfa pasture, averaging about one-half gallon of corn (3½ pounds) a day per head. At the end of eight months he sells at an average weight of 250 pounds.—Coburn's Swine in America.

SUBSTITUTE FOR GATE.

There are places where a common everyday gate is an utter nuisance and where a turnstile or some other gate substitute or contrivance is particularly convenient and welcome. With the arrangement herewith illustrated the gateway is always closed to animals, but men may pass through it without difficulty. The accompanying drawing will give a clear idea of the plan. The sketch is made to represent a very small gate, but to answer all purposes the wing panels and gate perhaps should be half a rod in length.

Spraying Experiments.

Experiments with fungicides upon potatoes have been carried on at the Vermont Experiment Station for eighteen years. Experiments made recently were designed particularly to determine the relative gain from spraying potatoes with bordeaux mixture and paris green, comparing the results from two, three and four applications. Two applications of bordeaux mixture made in August proved less efficient in checking the flea beetle and early blight than where other applications were made, particularly the spraying made in early July. The increase in marketable tubers for the sprayed over the unsprayed lots varies from 52 to 172 per cent.

Kerosene Emulsion.

Here is a recipe for kerosene emulsion: Hard soap, half pound; boiling water, 1 gallon; coal oil, 2 gallons. Dissolve the soap in the water, pour in the coal oil and churn or beat together briskly with a paddle for at least ten minutes. Dilute from ten to twenty-five times before applying. Use it strong for scale insects. Kerosene emulsion destroys insects which suck, such as plant lice, red spiders, etc. It will also kill cabbage worms, caterpillars, and all insects with soft bodies.

Bordeaux Mixture.

The Bordeaux mixture is the proper remedy to use for all fungous troubles, viz., mildew and rust of beans; potato and tomato rot and leaf-blight; melon and cucumber diseases; celery leaf-blight and rust, etc. The half-strength mixture (two pounds copper sulphate, two pounds quicklime, fifty gallons of water) is strong enough to use in the vegetable garden, except for potatoes.

Utilizing Farm Waste.

Dr. Wiley, the chemist of the Department of Agriculture is making some interesting experiments at Washington in turning farm waste into wood alcohol, to be used as fuel and for manufacturing purposes. His experiments so far have been confined to corn and potatoes, but fodder is to be tried.

Clothespin Is Improved.

If asked the question, the majority of housewives would say that the common clothespin was perfectly satisfactory in its present form. Nevertheless, a decided improvement can be made in these laundry accessories. The improved pin resembles somewhat the clamps used by photographers to support wet prints while drying.

NEW CLOTHESPIN.

They are made so that any number can be placed on a clothesline, being movable in either direction. The clothes are supported by the small jaws, the grip being decidedly firmer than in the ordinary clothespin. In addition the clothes do not come in direct contact with the clothesline and cannot become soiled, as is often the case with the ordinary line. They are also easier to handle and, after the clothes are removed, are allowed to remain on the line.

Orange Fool.

Peel five oranges. Cut into thin slices, pour over them a heaping cupful of sugar. Boil one pint of milk, add while boiling the yokes of three eggs, one tablespoonful of cornstarch made smooth with a little cold milk. Stir all the time. As soon as thickened, pour over the fruit. Beat the whites of eggs to a froth, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, pour over the custard and brown in the oven. Serve cold.

Egg Sandwiches.

Mash the yolks of hard-boiled eggs to a powder and moisten with olive oil and a few drops of vinegar. Work to a paste, add salt, pepper and French mustard to taste, with a drop or two of tabasco sauce. Now chop the whites of the eggs as fine as possible (or until they are a coarse powder) and mix them with the yolk paste. If more seasoning is necessary, add it before spreading the mixture upon sliced graham bread.

Blackberry Catsup.

Cover mashed berries with boiling water, simmer fifteen minutes, mash again and strain. Allow to each quart of juice a half-teaspoonful each mace, cinnamon, pepper and white mustard. Cook down to about a quarter of the original quantity, add pure white wine or cider vinegar to make strength and consistency required, bottle and seal while hot.

Value of Pimentoes.

Not every one is as familiar with the canned Spanish red peppers (pimentoes) as they should be. The peppers are tasty additions to soups, salads, etc., and are delicious stuffed with bread crumbs, rice or meat or fish mixtures and served as an entree, or served whole as a garnishment and relish with the steak.

Save Mustard Glasses.

Save your prepared mustard glasses to use for holding soda, baking powder, cream of tartar, etc.; print labels for same with ink in large, clear letters, or have typewritten if possible; and in order to prevent them from being rubbed off when washing them paste the label inside the glass.

Corn Oysters.

Three-fourths of a pint of grated corn, yolk of one egg, salt and pepper to taste. Just before frying add beaten white of the egg, and if the corn is very dry, add a little cream or rich milk. Drop in hot fat from a tablespoon—about the size of a large oyster, and fry brown.

Short Suggestions.

A little wire broom is excellent for cleaning the horseradish grater.

A can of condensed milk keeps better if the top is left open, admitting the air.

Spermaceti added to boiled starch gives the goods a gloss; borax makes the starch stiffer.

Pineapples should be sliced first, and then pared. In this way the eyes may be removed with less waste.

Cake or cookies that have become stale may be freshened by the addition of a slice of bread to the jar.

Spinach has a better flavor if cooked in stock left from joint or fowl. Add, too, a few slices of green pepper.

Pie pans having burned crust in the bottom should not be scraped. Soak them in hot soda water, which will clean them thoroughly.

A bit of glue dissolved in skim milk and water will restore old crepe. Dip the crepe lightly into the mixture and hang to dry in the open air.

In baking apples it is best to leave in some of the core. This will prevent the juice of sugar, butter and cinnamon escaping into the pan.

Do not wash white silk knit underwear with warm water or resinous soap. It must be washed in tepid water, with white soap, and ironed dry, otherwise it will turn an ugly yellow.

Do not launder stockings with other clothes, because the lint from other garments will adhere to them. Use ammonia in water to wash them, and they will not spot. It removes perspiration.

Varnished paint can be kept looking as bright as when new by cleaning it with whole linseed. The method is to soak a bag containing the seed for some time in water and then to use it as a cloth to clean the paint.

Water bottles which obstinately remain stained may be treated with a solution made of tea leaves, water, vinegar and a lump of salt. After this has stood for a couple of hours the bottle should be rinsed and left to drain, neck down.

A Little Sermon to Girls.

Each one of us, then, must do these two things: Understand ourselves and understand others. It is not enough to claim the right of the individual to "grow" as he sees fit. It is impertinent to announce that "my mother is behind the times." None of us can grow rightly if we grow rudely, defiantly, wounding unnecessarily, failing in kindness and consideration. We may sometimes have to give pain, as when one changes a church, and so offends a parental prejudice. But if conviction be strong, one cannot be irritable, the crisis is too vital, and it is just because we do lack real conviction in any stand we take that we grow irritable in little things. Conviction makes us serious. It is when we have only half thought out some subject for ourselves that we grow irritable and prove unequal to the task of either enlightening those we pain or of steering the bark of our cherished purposes through distracting shoals.—Harper's Bazaar.

Kept Her Word.

"Harold," said the young woman, resolutely, "I promised my mother I never would marry any man without asking him how he stood on the great question of woman suffrage. You will have to tell me how you stand."

"I'm opposed to it, Bella," bluntly answered the young man.

"Well—er—that's all I promised mamma; I didn't bind myself to refuse any good man just because he—now, Harold, you stop that!"—Chicago Tribune.

Hard to Handle.

"How are you going to keep complaints from arising among consumers?"

"I don't know," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Consumers are mighty troublesome. Sometimes I think they take advantage of the fact that we can't get along without 'em in our business."

And He Got No Tip.

The man with the broad expanse of unoccupied territory on the summit of his cranium was irritable.

"I part my hair," he said, crossly, "on the left side."

"Yes, sir," said the barber, with unruffled politeness; "you part it, perhaps, with a can opener."

American Simplicity.

An American bishop who was visiting in England was greatly amused, not to say annoyed, by the way the Englishmen addressed him. Indeed, he became heartily tired of "Your Grace."

"When I returned to America," the bishop would say afterward, "you can imagine my surprise and delight, too, when one of my friends, standing on the pier, caught a glimpse of me as I waited to descend the gangplank, and called forth to me, 'Hello, Bish!'"

Wrong Kind of Cook.

Mistress—Jane, I can't have you entertaining company in my kitchen all the time.

New Cook—Faith, an' it do be your own fault, ma'am. Yes should 'ave advertised for a plain cook.—Puck.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD

For the Best Ear of Corn

To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy

To be Awarded at the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If your is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today and get a dollar bottle. Then after you have used the entire contents of the bottle if you can honestly say, that it has not done you any good, return the bottle to the druggist and he will refund your money without question or delay. We will then pay the druggist for the bottle. Don't hesitate, all druggists know that our guarantee is good. This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family. The large bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

Kodol is prepared at the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

PRESTON & COMPANY

COMMERCIAL CLUB REORGANIZED

A Stove Factory Proposition Put Up to the Citizens--100 Men to be Employed.

For the past week several of our prominent citizens have been doing some fall hustling. As a result of some correspondence, a stock company have had their representatives here several days confering with the people regarding the possibility of coming here to engage in the wholesale manufacture of stoves, gasoline ranges, etc. They have a capital stock of $50,000.

The president of the company is thoroughly versed in the stove business.

The raising of the $13,000 dollars of course falls upon the Commercial club who have selected three of our foremost citizens, viz: T. J. Knisely, Sam G. Stone and Dr. W. F. Shumaker to go ahead with that part of the business. They have secured as assistance J. E. Decker, Walter Snider, L. C. Harding and others, thus dividing the work of soliciting contributions from the people of Butler and surrounding country. The subscriptions will not be confined to the citizens only, as the farms in the immediate vicinity will be materially benefitted by an immediate increase in valuation. Besides the above mentioned committee, let every man, woman and child take an active part in bringing this factory to our town, so that they can in the future point to the enterprise and with pride say they assisted in getting it here.

Do not forget friends that all you give toward the enterprise will be returned with a large interest if it proves all right, and when such men as above mentioned are connected with a business or are in favor of a thing it is quite likely to be sound and safe as the judgment of these men certainly is worthy of confidence in the highest degree, besides the proposition is so plain that it cannot be misunderstood.

This is a chance for Butler people to do something for the town and one which may not be repeated very soon. At present the outlook is very flattering and the committee is fully confident that the amount will be raised within a few days. Business will be stimulated as soon as the amount is raised and improvements will double immediately. Let everyone put his shoulder to the wheel and push it along.

The essential parts of the proposition are as follows:

Article of agreement made and entered into at Butler, Indiana, this 20th day of Aug. 1909, by and between ——party of the first part and Dr. W. F. Shumaker, Sam G. Stone and T. J. Knisely, as trustees of the Butler Commercial Club, parties of the second part, witnesseth:—

That whereas some negotiations have taken place between the above named partes whereby the said party of the first part is to construct in the City of Butler, Indaina, an Iron manufacturing industry, which shall manufacture steel range stoves and all appliances there to belonging, which plant and buidings shall be constructed in a substantial manner as follows: said main bulding to be 60x100 feet and shall contain not less than 19,800 feet of floor space, made of brick and to be three stories high. B. H. S. OF '96 HOLDS REUNION

County Superintendent Coe, of Auburn, Participates in Festivities

Last Friday afternoon the members of the class of '96 of the Butler high school, with their former instructor, Prof. H. E. Coe, of Auburn, met on the broad veranda of Mr. E. P. Masters and enjoyed a splendid reunion. There was no evidence of race suicide here, the lawn being dotted with gallant lads and dainty Misses busily engaged in caring for dolls and Teddy bears.

After renewing acquaintances and relating anecdotes, a pleasant contest on the "Human Body" was given. This was followed by the '96 class baby. Each present was given an all day sucker, pink crepe paper and ribbon and a white tissue napkin containing carnations the class flower and ordered to fashion a baby from said material.

Mr. Coe demured, saying his wife always dressed the children, but he managed the affair with credit nevertheless, the finished product being a pink and white baby, representing the class colors which were given as souvenirs of the occasion.

This was followed by farewell greetings to County Superintendent Coe, who left on the four o'clock triain. The class then indulged in a drawing contest which occasioned much fun.

A splendid picnic luncheon followed, consisting of veal loaf, bread and butter sandwiches, potato salad, potato chips and pickels. The second course consisting of ice cream, cake and watermelon. After dispatching this repast the old school song book was brought forward and the ladies sang with a zest that belied gray hair and crows feet.

After a most delightful afternoon and loving farewells the class of '96 disbanded, hoping to meet again at a time when it would be possible for our comrades beyond the Rockies to meet with us.

CLASS ROLL

Mr. Robert Coe, Surrey, Cal.
Miss Mary Lewis, Healdsburg, Cal.
Miss Achasa Beechler, Butler.
Mrs. Bertha Daily Creager, Butler.
Mrs. Bertha Masters Plowe, Bad Ax, Mich.
Mrs. Zella Zeigler Phillips, Butler.
Mrs. Bessie Stewart Powers, Butler.
Mrs. Atlanta Kester Cather, Butler.
Mrs. Bessie Kester Hollinger, Bryan, Ohio.
Miss Ella Imhoff, (deceased) Butler.

Regrets were received from Miss Lewis, Mr. Coe and Mrs. Cather.

Those of the second generation present were: Masters Harold Plowe, Raymond Hollinger and Burdette Powers, Misses Eloise Powers, Jeanette Plowe, Mildred and Virginia Hollinger and baby Kathaleen Phillips.

The following letter was received and read at the reunion:

Healdsburg, Cal., Aug. 16, '09.

My Dear Friends—Your note is at hand and I hasten to reply. Cannot tell you how I long to be present at this reunion. It would be so delightful to see you all again. Think it would only be fair for Robert and I to have a like celebration on this side of the Rockies.

I have been thinking of the many changes in the years since we finished school. It seems singular that seven of the nine are able to meet in the home town to enjoy the reminiscence of happy days that are gone but not forgotten.

The old school house with its stairs and stairs, the top of which it seemed we never would reach, then those alluring halls and enchanting class rooms have all been replaced by the new structure, modern in every detail. Does the tablet placed by our class remain, and did the tree grow?

The visits of Butler friends have been such happy seasons for us. Mr. and Mrs. Mason left us a few days ago. We drove out through one of the beautiful valleys, the orchards laden with ripening fruits, the vine covered hills with the wooded mountains in the distance unite in picturesque grandeur. Northern California has so much natural beauty. Papa, mamma and I spent six months of the past year in southern California. We found a most delightful winter climate, a congenial class of people and many interesting places to visit, but home seems best after all.

I am wondering if Professor Coe will be present. How good he was to us. I shall never forget him and somehow the class circle would be incomplete, were he absent. Memories of his strong christian character exemplified in his daily life and permeating each days lessons, have proven most helpful on life's way. Fortunate, indeed, are the pupils who sit under such teachers and receive not only mental but spiritual training also.

I should be glad to receive a "party" letter, telling me all about the reunion. Wishing for you all a most happy evening and with much love

I am sincerely,
MARY E. LEWIS.

BUTLER VISITED BY MILITARY TOURISTS

It was a bronzed and dust covered khaki-clad trio which motored into Butler, Monday afternoon, Aug. 23, when Private Malcolm E. Parrott, N. Y. S. N. G., and his mechanician, Frank X. Zirbes, accompanied by Lieut. B. B. Rosenthal, who are bearing war dispatches from Major General Leonard A. Wood, U. S. A., commanding the department of the east, and Major General John F. Weston, commanding the department of California, arrived here in the Mitchell Ranger.

The military tourists left Governors Island, N. Y., on August 19, and when they arrive at the Presidio at San Francisco the Mitchell Ranger will have covered approximately 3,693 miles through eleven states and completed the first "transcontinental" run ever essayed for military purposes.

Because of Major General Wood's desire to see the establishment of an automobile service in connection with the regular and volunteer forces the present trip was inaugurated, and unusual interest is being evinced in the run by military authorities all over the country on account of the large appropriation which will be asked from congress next year for automobiles to be used in connection with the signal corps of the U. S. A. The war car which is being used to convey General Wood's message is the first of the 1910 low-priced, four cylinder models turned out by Designer Bate at the Mitchell Motor Car company's factory at Racine, Wis. Although the Mitchell Ranger is not especially equipped mechanically, it presents a very warlike appearance with its fire-arms, haversacks, picks, shovels and other military paraphernalia.

Prior to leaving New York, Private Parrott was presented with a flag by the members of the 10th Regiment, Col. John J. Pruyn commanding. The presentation was made by Captain W. L. Burnett of Company K., at Poughkeepsie, which is Mr. Parrott's home town.

Accompanying Private Parrott as mechanician is Frank X. Zirbes who has piloted a car from New York to Chicago several times, and who made a famous record with a Mitchell car in the "around the clock" endurance run in Milwaukee two years ago. The courier in the party bearing General Wood's message is Lieutenant B. B. Rosenthal, a veteran of the signal corps of the Spanish-American war. Because of his knowledge of construction work, Lieutenant Rosenthal was selected by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, a few years ago, to take charge of the tour which she played under circus tents in the west and southwest when the theatrical syndicate refused to let the famous French actress play in its theatres because she was under rival management. Lieutenant Rosenthal will have charge of any temporary bridge building or road making which may be necessary in the western country where boulevards are unknown and trails are even sometimes undiscoverable.

Because of its clearance and excellent braking features, the Mitchell Ranger is especially adapted to the diversified highways and trails that will be encountered. The Ranger is equipped with a Jones speedometer and Hartford tires.

A Grove Meeting, Aug. 29

The ten Churches of Christ of De Kalb county will hold their regular yearly meeting this year in Bartles grove which is the first grove north of the B. & O. railroad on the east side of the first highway running north just east of Garrett. The meeting was put off one week on account of the grove being in use the 22nd of August. The grove is a beautiful one and almost ideal for a religious gathering. Those driving from different points in the county will find plenty of shade and good water for their horses.

There will be both a forenoon and afternoon session. The Bible school will be at 9:30 in the morning and the preaching service at 10:45. The afternoon service will begin at 2:15. The communion service will be first and after this the sermon by J. D. Hull, of Mishawaka, who will be the principal speaker of the day. The church at Kendallville where he was pastor will be at the meeting in the afternoon. The Kendallville minister and the ministers of the attending churches will participate in the services of the day.

All are urged to make a special effort to be at the splendid up-to-date Bible school service in the morning. The classes will be arranged according to the regular departments. The regular teachers of the Garrett school will teach in all departments except the adult.

As has been the custom heretofore the basket dinner will be in the grove. Those who have to come on the train, Saturday evening, will be entertained by the Garrett people if they are informed of their coming. Names can be sent to the minister at Garrett. The evening service will be held in the Garrett church and the sermon will be by a visiting minister.

The minister and congregation at Garrett extend a cordial invitation to the other ministers and their congregations of the city to be present at the grove meeting especially in the afternoon. The hour service on the T. & C. will make it convenient for all to attend this meeting. The cars stop at the road leading to the grove.

Sechler Reunion

The home of Henry Sechler and wife, on East Oak street, was the scene of a very pleasant memorable gathering on Wednesday, Aug. 18, the event being the nineteenth annual reunion of the Sechler family. At an early hour the guests began arriving with well filled baskets, and at noon sixty relatives and friends sat down to a sumptuous dinner.

After dinner came an interesting program followed by short talks by the president of the association, Henry Sechler, and Rev. N. S. Brundage, pastor of the Church of God. The remainder of the day was spent in a social manner, music adding greatly to pleasure of the guests. Later ice cream and cake were served, the guests dispersing to meet the last Saturday in August, 1910, with Frank Kinsey at St. Joe.

The invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Rudd, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. O. Treeman, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Treeman, Bessie Jennings, Mrs. J. E. Grindle and daughter, Mrs. Wm. Richard and daughter and Esther Hiner.

CURRENT RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Dr. John W. Nelson, in a recent address on "Religion and the Home," says:

"In many homes the father has abdicated his divinely ordained office as high priest of the family; the mother has set aside her duty as priestess. The bodies of the children are sumptuously fed and fashionably clothed, any other course would be deemed inhuman. Their minds are abundantly provided for. Neglect here would be inexcusable. But the soul, the throne of the divine image, the Holy of Holies, the nerve center of man's divinity, the soul! this embryo of eternity! is farmed out to the church or left like an uncultivated Paradise to run riot and bring forth a harvest of night shades and apples of Sodom. The teaching by example is little better. The Bible is an unopened and unread book; the meal an unhallowed repast; the church an institution for convenience of respectability, perhaps an investment; the Sabbath a day of self gratification with its round of selfish pleasure and banqueting."

Drug Store Goods
That You want
When You want them

The reason why we do so much business is as simple as one, two, three---the things most wanted are here when wanted.

Take for instance vacation wants---the myriad of things that were wanted in a hurry, all in a single week or two. You didn't need to wait until Geddes' Drug Store got them in, they were here when wanted.

And so on, we might go through the entire list of Drug Store Goods, and show how natural it is to have things wanted when wanted.

Stricter Exclusion for Undesirable Aliens

Ellis Island, that portal through which pours four-fifths of the motley hordes that make up the immigration to this country, has once more become a shining mark for popular attention. There are some who would fling its doors wide open, and on the other hand there are extremists who urge total exclusion. To handle this problem at New York, the chief port of entry, a new commissioner of immigration was recently appointed, or, more accurately, a former one was reappointed. He is William Williams, a New York city lawyer.

It cannot be too often repeated that for several reasons the problem presented by what may be termed the new immigration of recent years is widely different from that presented by the earlier immigration. In considering the problem as it exists today two propositions must constantly be borne in mind.

Most of the immigration proceeds, not as formerly from the northern portion of Europe, but from Italy, Austria and Russia, and some of it from the least desirable population of those countries. No one would object to the better classes of Italians, Austrians and Russians coming here in large numbers; but the point is that they do not come to any great extent.

The great bulk of the present immigration settles in five or six of the eastern states, and most of it in the large cities of those states. The tendency on the part of so many of the newcomers to locate in the cities is one of the unfortunate and startling features of the present immigration. They resort to them to an extent three times greater than do the native born, and by so doing accentuate one of the unhealthy phenomena of modern social life—the abnormal growth of the cities at the expense of the country.

Every intelligent person is aware of the fact that large numbers of immigrants of the right kind are coming here, and no one should wish to discourage them in so doing. But while Europe has a great many desirable people, she also has millions of undesirable ones, each nation of Europe has its portion of both, and it is most natural that no obstacles should be placed in the way of the latter leaving their respective countries.

The mere fact that immigrants of the undesirable kind are able to earn a livelihood does not of itself prove that they are wanted. Their presence may be and often is due to industrial depression abroad. They come here not because we want them, as we do want good farm laborers for the West and South, but because our higher economic level and better conditions attract them. The claim is often made that even these undesirable elements serve a useful purpose in that they relieve Americans of the necessity of performing certain low-grade work and enable them to fill higher places. This sounds well, but as applied to the United States at the present time may be fallacious; for the time has come when such higher places are not always vacant; so that the American laborer may, in effect, be driven out of employment not driven into higher employment.

If the immediate development of all material resources were the chief end in view, regardless of political or social effects, then the introduction of low grade people; merely because they are cheap laborers, could perhaps be justified, but in that event we should admit also the Chinese, who are among the most efficient in the world. But it is realized that there are considerations of greater importance than the immediate material development of the country, that our national ideals, institutions and character cannot be endangered for mere pecuniary gain, and that our own people must not be driven out of employment by compulsory competition with foreigners of unduly low standards.

How further to curtail immigration of the undesirable kind without interfering with the legitimate commercial demands for further immigration of the right kind is a problem that is puzzling a great many thinking people. The difficulty of its solution is increased by reason of the fact that it is impracticable to legislate directly or discriminate against any race or locality of Europe, as we have done in the case of the Chinese.

A large number of immigrants, probably over 50 per cent, now come here because they are assisted to do so. As a rule that man will be the better immigrant who comes of his own initiative and with his own money.

Although the law makes no requirement regarding money, the commissioner feels that he has sufficient discretionary power to fix the sum of $25 as a minimum amount which some immigrants must have before they gain admission. To the various steamship agencies he has said:

"Certain steamship companies are bringing to this port many immigrants whose funds are manifestly inadequate for their proper support until such time as they are likely to obtain profitable employment. Such action is improper and must cease. In the absence of a statutory provision, no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the amount of money an immigrant must bring with him, but in most cases it will be unsafe for immigrants to arrive with less than $25, besides railroad ticket to destination, while, in many instances, they should have more. They must in addition, of course, satisfy the authorities that they will not become charges on public or private charity."

DOG NEARLY KILLS WOMAN.

Mrs. John Turpin of Upland, Pa., engaged in a desperate encounter with a large Newfoundland dog, and the terrible lacerations inflicted by the brute's fangs are liable to cause her death. The experience so affected her nerves that she was not rational for several hours after. Mrs. Turpin was calling upon Mrs. Joseph Glenn, a next-door neighbor, when the dog, which is owned by the Glenns, attacked her. The animal threw her down upon the porch, grabbed her by the hair of her head and dragged her around the yard, paying no attention to the vigorous beating administered by Mrs. Glenn with a club. Great pieces of flesh were chewed out of Mrs. Turpin's face and arms, and she was unconscious when finally rescued by Policeman Joseph W. Price, who shot the dog.

In addition to 14,662 miles of government railroads there are some 1,400 miles of privately owned railroads in Australia, but of them and their working comparatively little is known.

The popular vote for presidential electors in 1888, the first year in which these reports were required by law, was 11,381,408; in 1892, 12,043,603; in 1896, 13,813,243; in 1900, 13,964,518; in 1904, 13,523,519, and in 1908, 14,887,133, or about one vote for every six persons.

AERIAL WARFARE COMING

WRITING under the title, "The Aerial Battleship, Carl Dienstbach and T. R. MacMechen in McClure's Magazine tell of the possibilities of aerial warfare, which they assume must come with the existence of air craft of the Zeppelin type as battleships and of the heavier-than-air type as light cruisers. At the outset they assert that the successful use of a rapid-firing gun, capable of throwing nearly sixty 1.9-inch shells a minute from the deck of the Zeppelin I., "means the end of armies within the next ten years." The strength and stability of these new ships are not a matter of theory or belief; they are already demonstrated facts. The Zeppelin I., under military crew, made nineteen ascensions between March 9 and April 6 in the mountainous country above Lake Constance, which is 1,300 feet above sea level. Three of these were made in snowstorms; one of them, lasting seven and a half hours, in a blizzard. In another trial the ship flew for hours, landed and anchored safely in a tremendous forty-mile gale. With the conclusions "that a new instrument for the general service of civilization has arrived" and that airships of the Zeppelin type have, according to experts, a "zone of safety" from attack by guns on the ground when traveling about 1,650 yards (nearly a mile) high, the authors say that "with the best of mechanism it would be practically impossible to hit these airships at any range that they would approach in battle," while, on the other hand, "nothing alive on the ground can escape the fire of an airship."

From the beginning it has been perfectly evident that the first important use of these craft would be as warships, and the chief discussion of them in Europe, where alone the development has been followed intelligently, has concerned their employment for this purpose. The French, not having a rigid type from which guns can be fired advantageously, have proposed the dropping of explosives from their cars. But the German military experts, immediately after taking over the Zeppelin I., conceived the idea of using rapid-fire guns and asked their gunmakers to prepare special airship artillery. The Kruppa produced their gun this spring. It is a light, high-powered weapon, said to weigh about 160 pounds, this light weight being made possible by special recoil mechanism. It fires a 1.9-inch shell, and can throw nearly sixty a minute to a distance of several miles from the elevated position of the airship. These shells are similar to those of the well-known mountain batteries, transported by pack animals, which were used in the Russo-Japanese war. They are very efficient missiles, bursting into a shower of small, sharp fragments, which cover a space of some fifty feet square. The level car of the airship proved an excellent gun platform in the trials, and the rigid structure, twenty tons in weight, was not affected by any recoil which guns of this character give.

After discussing in detail the development of the Zeppelin airship for military purposes in Germany, the writers conclude that "aerial navies will be an accomplished fact at an early date, not only because they are highly efficient, but because they are cheap."

STOP HINDOO FUNERAL RITES.

An attempt on the part of Hindoo laborers to turn the Sacramento River into a second Ganges was frustrated near Sacramento, Cal., by Coroner Gormley, who prevented them from placing the body of one of their comrades aboard a funeral raft which they were preparing to send blazing down the stream. The raft, with its huge pyre, had been prepared by a group of Hindoos and they were all ready to set it adrift with its grewsome cargo when Coroner Gormley, who had been warned by neighboring farmers, sent a deputy to take possession of the body.

WANTED FRESH EGGS, SO TAKE HENS ON TRAVELS.

Simply because some one in Greensburg, N. J., told Mrs. Elizabeth Walker and her sister, Elizabeth Pallen, that it was impossible to get fresh eggs in New York, the management of the Hoffman House came dangerously near incurring the enmity of the health board.

The two young women registered at the hotel early in the day. They were much interested in a large wicker basket which they caused the porter to bring close to the desk. The clerk found a room for Mrs. Walker and her sister. Ten minutes later the clerk ascended to the apartment and there found four hens and a rooster lolling about. He asked Mrs. Walker the meaning.

"My sister," she answered, "must have fresh eggs every day. We understand they couldn't be had here so we brought the source of supply along." Having had the hens and rooster restored to the basket the clerk called the department of health and asked that the birds be sent for.

"Any complaint?" asked the voice.

"None," said the clerk. "But I know it is a violation of the law."

After some more explaining Mrs. Walker had the poultry shipped back to Greensburg, thus depriving the Hoffman House of an adddition to its roof.

"Anyway," Mrs. Walker said afterward to her sister, "we'll cut our stay here short and you needn't eat eggs."

NOW BRIDE OF A BANKER.

Nordica Weds G. W. Young of New York—Third Marital Venture.

Mme. Lillian Nordica, the American opera singer, has been married in London to George W. Young, New York banker, at King's Way House Church, Grosvenor Square. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a few friends, most of whom are well known in America and English society.

Her marriage to Mr. Young is her third matrimonial venture. Her first husband was Frederick A. Gower, a wealthy electrician, whom she met and married in Paris in 1882. They did not live happily together and three years later Mme. Nordica began legal proceedings for a separation. The case was postponed from time to time, and in 1887 news was received that Gower had lost his life while making an attempt to cross the English channel in a balloon. His body was never recovered. Mme. Nordica settled her claim to the estate for $40,000.

Mme. Nordica's second marriage took place in Indianapolis on May 27, 1896, when she wedded Zoltan Doeme, the Hungarian tenor. She obtained a divorce from Doeme in 1904.

Mr. Young has long been a prominent figure in social and financial circles in New York. His first wife, whom he married in 1889, divorced him in Trenton last year. He has two children.

Nordica is very proud of having received a fee of $2,500 for singing at Dorchester house on the occasion of Ambassador Reid's party for the king and queen. She says it is the biggest fee ever paid any woman singer in Europe or America.

SERVED 31-YEAR TERM

Day of Freedom for Iowa Convict Like Tableau of Aladdin's Lamp.

FINDS WORLD OF MYSTERY

Only Grass and Sky the Same and Autos and Airships Are Beyond His Comprehension.

"Why, the world has grown up!" exclaimed William P. Glyndon, for thirty-one years a convict in the Iowa State prison here, as he stood at the railroad station and waited for the train that was to take him to Cedar Rapids. The day had been a tableau of "Aladdin's Lamp" to him, a New York Evening Telegram's Fort Madison (Ia.) correspondent says.

In the morning he was the oldest convict in the prison, with a record of having served the State longer within the darkened building than any other inmate. When liberated he had been whisked into town in an automobile and had put in a busy day looking at things which are familiar to children of to-day, but strange to him.

"Only the grass and the sky look the same," he said with a smile, "and I feel lost, although I remember well how things looked the day I was taken to prison.

"Everything has grown up," repeated Glyndon.

"I tell you it is fine to work out among the trees and the flowers. No one knows how to appreciate them till he has been shut away from them for many years, thirty-one in my case. I didn't know what a telephone was until given my release. Yes, I talked over one and some one talked to me. I couldn't hear very well at first. My ear wasn't accustomed to it, I guess, for after a while I could distinguish the words and understand. Men seem to be flying, so rapidly do they move about. When I left the world good horses were a luxury. Much labor was being done with slow ox teams. I rode in an automobile. I thought my freedom was to be brief, for I expected to be dashed to pieces every minute. And the streets now are all brick and stone and wood. Everything looks prosperous. The world has been moving. So changed is it that it all seems like a fairy story, and I believe most anything is within the possibility of man. They tell me they have flying machines. I am anxious to see one of them. These moving pictures are the greatest things I have ever seen. In prison the first year was as long as the next four years, and the first five years were as long as the other twenty-six. After five years I became reconciled to my fate."

Glyndon was convicted in April, 1878, in Grundy County, Iowa, of the murder of one Wipka Martens, a German girl of about 14 years of age. She was found dead in a cornfield and Glyndon was arrested and convicted on the testimony of one man, who claimed to have seen Glyndon in the vicinity a short time before the girl's death. Glyndon, when he was arrested, told the officers all about where he had been that day, explaining all his movements and persons he had met, which was corroborated in his story.

The strong point in Glyndon's case is that he was convicted wholly on circumstantial evidence. Glyndon always has maintained his innocence.

Glyndon can get no recompense from the State. He has been in prison exactly thirty-one years and thirty-one days and has performed labor for the State to the amount of tens of thousands of dollars. He served in the civil war for three years and has an honorable discharge. He has drawn a pension of $12 a month from the government since 1890. He is 70 years of age.

GOT SNAKE INSTEAD OF HEN.

When Mrs. Hannah Abrams, of Spencer, Ind., inserted her hand in a barrel to supposedly lift a hen from her nest she grasped instead of the hen, the folds of a blacksnake that was sleeping in the barrel in which the hens had been laying. The snake was promptly killed. It was 6 feet 8 inches long. Near the middle of its body was a large lump, and an incision in the skin revealed a glass egg. The egg was identified by Mrs. Abrams as one she had been using as a nest egg.

Richard U. Sherman, son of Vice President James S. Sherman, was elected president of the Consolidated Water Company of Utica, a $3,000,000 corporation, and he immediately resigned his position as private secretary to William Loeb, collector of the port of New York.

THE WOMEN OF SPAIN.

Fettered by Both Custom and Law, They Lead Narrow Lives.

The vast majority of Spanish women still believe that it is degrading for a lady to take up any work for which she is paid. Therefore if they do not marry they either enter a convent or live with a member of the family, and they do not at all mind being dependent on the charity of friends or relatives.

Though marriages are often arranged without the consent of the bride-elect, law or custom gives the Spanish woman the power of appealing to a magistrate if she wishes to escape from a union which is distasteful to her.

The magistrate may take her from her father's home until she is of age, while if she determines to marry a man of whom her parents disapprove she may also place herself under the protection of the law, and she cannot be deprived of her share of the family estate.

On reaching her majority she enjoys the same privileges as her brother with regard to property, and may inherit, will, buy and sell; but when she marries she reverts to the position of a minor, and her husband has entire control of all her possessions, which he can squander without rendering any account to her, though she cannot spend a penny of her own money without his consent. He may desert her and her children without incurring any punishment or much public condemnation. A Spanish lady confers on her husband the titles of nobility and any privilege connected therewith she may possess at the time of her marriage.

Public opinion is still so strongly opposed to their education that it will be a long time before they are fitted to take their share in their country's work, and many women are so ignorant that they can hardly read their missals or write their names. This is especially the case in small country towns. At Madrid schools have been opened for their instruction, and the classes have been conducted by excellent professors, but comparatively few women have availed themselves of the privilege.

What's in a Name.

A crabbed bachelor and an aged spinster one day found themselves at a concert. The selections were apparently unfamiliar to the gentleman, but when Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was begun he pricked up his ears. "That sounds familiar," he exclaimed. "I'm not very strong on those classical pieces, but that's very good. What is it?"

The spinster cast down her eyes. "That," she told him, demurely, "is the 'Maiden's Prayer.'" — Cleveland Leader.

Told by the Features.

Men who succeed in commerce have alert faces, but no particular features. Clergymen who go up the ladder of preferment have faces that tell of self-repression—tight lips, eyes which look straight ahead. Artists, on the other hand, have eyes which are all over the place and small, well formed chins. Politicians who succeed by their influence over men have always prominent noses.

Dear Sirs: In writing you this, I am doing something that I have never done before, voluntarily. Several weeks ago I saw your coupon in the "Times-Star," and as a last resort I thought I would try your Haarlem Oil Capsules. You sent me the coupon, and to make a long story short, I am now on my second box. I am, or was suffering from what I supposed was kidney trouble, caused by an over-indulgence of beer, and the pain I suffered at night was excruciating, and left me feeling bad all next day. I have since then stopped drinking beer, thinking that would allay the pain, but without any good results. But your capsules have given me so much ease. I felt that not to write you would be doing you an injustice, hence this letter. I am going to continue their use indefinitely. Thanking you for your generous kindness in sending a coupon, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

English Pauper's Ingenuity.

How a pauper obtained wool to knit socks and mittens, which he sold to enable him to buy tobacco, was described to the West Ham magistrates recently, the London Chronicle says. The pauper was Thomas Ledgett, aged 49, an inmate of the Stratford branch of the Poplar Union, and he was charged with damaging a number of blankets, the property of the guardians.

The master of the workhouse found that the wool binding the edges of blankets was being removed, and that in five days no fewer than 345 blankets were so damaged. A search failed to discover who was taking the wool, but when Ledgett was removed to the farm colony at Laindon it came to the knowledge of the master that he had been seen knitting with pink wool. Friday the master went to Laindon, and on searching the prisoner's bed he found a bag filled with balls of pink wool, evidently stripped from the blankets, and three socks knitted with pink wool. Ledgett, who denied that he had stripped 345 blankets, was sentenced to two months' hard labor.

I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, and I am still perfectly well."

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

BLINDNESS NO HANDICAP.

Sightless Explorer Goes Around the World Without Attendant.

The recent refusal of a railway booking clerk to issue a ticket to a blind man who was unaccompanied by a guide would have sounded rather ridiculous to James Holman, the famous "blind traveler."

Although absolutely sightless, this remarkable man visited, very early in the last century, almost every place of note in the world, and throughout his wanderings he was quite unattended. Yet he never met with any serious mishap, says Pearson's Weekly.

His energy and adaptability were marvelous. He scaled lofty mountains, forded broad and rapid streams and crossed in safety sandy deserts that taxed to the utmost the powers of normally constituted individuals.

Naturally he met with many adventures, some of which he incorporated in a most interesting volume, now long out of print and very rare. At one time he was traveling in the wilds of Eastern Siberia, driving his own sleigh, which he picked out each morning from a number of others and harnessed himself. This was reported to the Russian governor, who ordered him to be arrested and deported as a spy, believing his blindness to be assumed.

He was probably the only male European who has ever been conducted over an Oriental seraglio, an experience which befell him not once only, but on three occasions. This was done to gratify the curiosity of the dusky beauties of the harem, who were glad to be able to see and converse with an educated white man, without losing caste by being seen in their turn.

Many other blind travelers have since made similar extended tours, and one of them, Dr. Louis Shepperd, has recently beaten all records by going twice around the world, covering, in the course of sightless wanderings, over 100,000 miles. But then of course traveling is not now the difficult and dangerous business it was in Holman's times.

On one occasion an ignorant quack was called by mistake to attend a council of physicians in a critical case. I have cured convalescence in twenty-four hours." —Sacred Heart Review.

Unconscious Worry.

A great many people worry unconsciously, says O. S. Marsden in Success Magazine. They don't understand why they are so tired in the morning, why their sleep was so disturbed and troubled.

This mental disturbance is often caused by the habit of taking things too seriously, carrying too great a weight of responsibility. Everywhere we see people who take life too seriously. Most of us are like the motorman, who not only starts and stops the car and tries to keep from running over people, but also feels tremendous anxiety and responsibility about the motive power.

One of the most helpful lessons life can impart is that which shows us how to do our work as well as it can be done and then let Principle take care of the result. How often have we been amazed to find things come out much better than we anticipated; to find that the great unseen Power that governs our lives through a wilderness of trial and tribulation into the open has guided our life ship through the fogs of difficulties and of sorrow, through storms of hardships and losses, safely into port.

The pilot does not lose heart when he cannot see his way. He turns to that mysterious compass which sees as plainly in the fog, and guides as faithfully in the tempests, as when the sea is like glass. We are in touch with a Power greater than any compass, greater than any pilot, a Power that can extricate us from the most desperate situation.

In Paris there are thirty-two miles of underground railways, which carry 35,000 passengers a day. Twenty-five miles more road are under consideration.

THREE REASONS.

Each with Two Legs and Ten Fingers.

A Boston woman who is a fond mother writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Bob, Jack and Dick, aged 6, 4 and 2 years respectively, are three of our reasons for using and recommending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor whose 3-year-old child was a weazened little thing, ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both husband and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march."

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

"There's a Reason."

FARMS AND FARMERS

Intensive Dairy Farming.

The question is often asked how many cows a certain number of acres will support. By the question is meant that the entire energy of the farm is to be devoted to raising food for the dairy cow. A farm in a good state of fertility can be easily arranged so that one could keep a cow to every two acres if the land is all good, rich, tillable land. And one would be able to raise both the forage or bulky part of the ration, and the grain ration, too. It could be done in a few years' time with the proper handling of the herd on the farm.

Three crops upon the farm will do it—first, corn; second, clover hay, and, third, peas and oats. Of course, the clover sod would be plowed down for corn and then the corn ground be put into peas and oats the following season. With these three foods one can make a balanced ration for the dairy cow without purchasing any other outside food, either concentrated or bulky.

The statement has often been made that an acre of good land will support a cow the year around. One dairyman made the remark that he could keep two cows on an acre, but practically the man who keeps one cow on two acres is doing very good business if he gets fair prices for the product. It is a fact that the demand for milk, butter and cheese is increasing faster than cows and the prices are continually advancing. There is no better business than dairying.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Water a Necessity for Crops.

This reservoir is 100 feet high and 37¼ feet in diameter and will hold 3,400 tons of water, an equivalent to 30 acre-inches of rain fall. An average rainfall of 13¼ inches during the growing season would fill to the point indicated. A rainfall of 9 inches, if completely utilized, would produce a yield of 30 bushels of wheat or 157 bushels of oats.

Reclaiming Washed Land.

I had about one acre of washed clay land on one side of a good field. It was absolutely devoid of vegetation, had been left out for a number of years after wasting fertilizer upon it, and was an eyesore. Early in the spring I crossed it with furrows about 5 feet apart. In these furrows I dropped wild blackberry roots, one about every 4 feet. I dropped a forkful of stable manure next to each root, partially covering it, and covered the whole with one furrow made with the turn plow. In the next furrow I dropped small pine tops and partially covered them with the plow. I went over all the land in the same way. The work required three days for two men and a team. The following spring I plowed out the middles. This was five years ago, and I have not touched the land since. I have gathered two good crops of blackberries and the land is now covered with heavy berry bushes and a good wild grass sod, with no wash to speak of.—G. M. Humphreys, in Agricultural Epitomist.

Fashion Robs the Farmers.

According to William Dutcher, president of the Audubon Societies of the United States, birds save to the farmer $200,000,000 a year in the destruction of noxious insects and noxious weeds. The great destroyers of birds are the plume hunters for millinery purposes. Birds destroyed for food are restocked by natural processes, but the plume hunters recognize no closed season.

Millinery interests in America represent $38,000,000 worth of work done by the birds for the farmers. The bobwhite is the arch destroyer of the potato bug, the cuckoo of the caterpillar, the woodpecker of the boring grub, the lark of the grasshopper and the sparrow of the weed seeds. President Dutcher thinks the birds are entitled to at least fair play from the milliners.

Striped Beetles.

Look out for the striped beetles. They often attack and destroy melons and cucumbers as fast as the plants appear above the ground. An application of wood ashes, air-slaked lime, or gypsum, tainted with kerosene or turpentine or carbolic acid, will help to drive them away. If you have only a few plants you can easily protect each hill by erecting a mosquito netting guard over it until the plants begin to run.

Beet Culture Wanes.

Comment has arisen over the apparent decadence of sugar-beet culture in the farming section about Toledo, Ohio. Where a few years ago a dozen fields could be seen without traveling more than a mile or two, now scarcely one exists. A farmer reported he saw but one field between Toledo and Monroe, though only a few years ago this section produced heavily. Several factors have arisen to work against beet raising. In the first place, labor and care considered, the present high-priced cereals are considerably more profitable; again, farmers have begun to learn that beets tax soil vitality about as heavily as any crop, and, unless fertilizing elements are constantly applied the land invariably suffers. Complaint is also made of difficulty in marketing the output.

For a Sucking Cow.

The following description is given of a device to prevent a cow from sucking herself:

Secure two lengths of small cord, also six pieces of round, light wood about 12 inches long and 1½ inches in diameter, bore ⅜ inch holes at each end of sticks, then having tied a knot at one end of the rope, thread on the sticks. Knot the cord on either side of the sticks, then throw the same across the cow's neck (having regulated the knots and sticks to suit the small of the neck and also the shoulder), and the end of the cords around the first knot. The accompanying illustration shows the result. This device prevents the cow from reaching her flanks.

Bitter Butter.

Bitter cream and butter may and generally does result after the cow has been feeding liberally on moldy hay, decaying roots and certain weeds. Another fruitful source of bitter cream and butter is the holding of the cream at too low a temperature, when objectionable bacteria get in their work, causing a pungent or bitter flavor. For best results cream should be cooled and held at a temperature of about 50 degrees for six or seven hours immediately after separation, after which it should be ripened in a temperature of from 60 to 70 degrees. When it begins to turn sour it is ready to be churned, and then the sooner it is churned the better. In small dairies, where several separator skimmings are required to make up the quantity of cream for a churning, the cream should never be run from the separator into the vessel holding previous skimmings. One needs a cream can of sufficient size to hold all that is required to make up the churning, and such vessels should be kept in a place where the temperature is about 60 degrees. Each skimming should be cooled before being emptied into this storage can. When fresh cream is emptied it should be at once thoroughly incorporated with the contents of the can by stirring with a spoon or ladle. Churning should not take place within five or six hours after the last cream has thus been added.—Field and Farm.

Silo Building.

In all silos the greatest waste occurs around the sides, particularly in the corners, because the air has greater access to these parts. The fodder is not packed tightly in the corners, the air fills the interstices and decay results. With the cylindrical silo the friction is equally distributed over the entire inside wall surface, so that the silage settles evenly.

The place a silo is to occupy may determine the form to build. There are several kinds. Chief among these are the round the stave, the square rectangular, and the octagonal form. A square or rectangular silo can usually be constructed within a barn with better economy of space than a round silo. For these reasons square silos are most frequently employed within the barn, and the circular type when a separate building is constructed.

Mottled Butter.

Streaky or mottled butter may be caused by the salt, or it may be due to the working of the butter. The salt is so evenly diffused in the finest kind of butter that, as is shown by a microscope, every grain is surrounded by a film of clear and transparent brine, which points out the necessity of avoiding the overworking of the butter before the salt is added. In the first working every particle of milk should be gotten rid of, but enough clear water should be left to dissolve every grain of salt in twelve hours before the next working. If this is done there will be but little danger of streakiness in the butter, but to get the best results the salt should be very finely ground.

Dimensions of an Acre.

An acre in this country contains 43,560 square feet, or 160 square rods. A patch 69 yards 5 inches wide and 70 yards long is practically an acre of ground. It is far better to see just how much can be raised on an acre than to follow the old plan of showing just how many acres one is able to plant and partially cultivate. The one-acre crop is in line with high-class diversified farming.

Shoeing Mules.

The hoof of the mule, being smaller and tougher than that of the average horse, does not need shoeing unless worked on hard roads a great deal. It is better not to have them shod if confined to work on the farm, unless used to haul heavy loads on frozen ground.

Grass for Shady Places.

The Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station has found out that, on railroads running east and west, it is necessary to plant a different kind of grass on the north side of embankments from the south side because of the different amount of sunlight that each side receives.

THE HOUSEHOLD

New Top for Milk Jars.

Two purposes are served by the combined cover and handle for milk jars designed by a Massachusetts man, as the name of the device indicates. The cover is a circular piece of flat metal with clasps extending downward so as to engage the upper end of the neck of the jar or bottle. The handle, which is connected with the cover, has its lower ends extending downward so as to form lock-buttons, which keep the top from sliding off the jar laterally. The device can be adjusted in a twinkling, but it will not come off unless the handle is turned at right angles with the jar. When a bottle of milk is being carried by this means it can be swung around with no fear of the top coming off if anybody wants to swing it around.

MILK BOTTLE TOP.

To Can Asparagus.

Select heads of asparagus as perfect as possible in every way. Wilted vegetables will not can nicely. In fact, the difficulties of canning vegetables like asparagus are so great it scarcely pays for the trouble. Trim and prepare the asparagus. Place it uncooked in the cans, filling as evenly as possible. Steam constantly for four hours. Fill the cans with boiling water. Screw on the covers as tightly as possible and stand away to cool, being very careful not to put them in a draft of air. When cold, tighten the covers and keep where it is dark and cool.

Apple Tory.

Peel some fine cooking apples and simmer them very gently till tender in a little water with a strip of lemon peel, a couple of cloves and a little sugar. Remove them and set them aside to cool. Cut some small rounds of sponge cake and moisten them with a few drops of wine. Arrange in a dish and place an apple on each; sprinkle chopped pistachio nut on the cake around the apples, each of which must be covered with a little liquid red jelly of the consistency requisite for coating the fruit. Set in a cold place until wanted, place a spoonful of whipped cream on each apple and serve.

Salmon Sandwiches.

If a housekeeper has grown tired of the conventional sandwich she should try those made of salmon. They are most palatable. The salmon is flaked and moistened with mayonnaise and then put as a filling between two extra-thin slices of brown bread with the crust cut off. Sweet sandwiches are also in fashion for luncheons and after-theater parties. The newest ones, served by a clever housewife, have a filling of candied cherries, chopped fine and moistened with orange juice.

Preserved Cherries.

Stone the cherries, preserving every ounce of juice. Weigh the fruit, allowing pound for pound of sugar. Put a layer of fruit to one of sugar until all is used up; pour over the juice and boil gently until the sirup begins to thicken. Use sour cherries.

Short Suggestions.

Tarragon vinegar is an essential touch to a sharp salad dressing.

The best fluid to use in washing muslin dresses of delicate color is rice water.

Silver may be cleaned and brightened by letting it stand half an hour in sour milk.

One housekeeper advises the use of half a lemon for removing match marks from paint.

To clean steel use emery powder and oil mixed into a paste. Polish with a clean duster.

If your paint has been marred by careless scratching of matches, try rubbing it with the finest sandpaper.

It is said that grass stains will come out if the spots are rubbed with a little fresh lard a while before they are washed.

A child's broom, purchasable for a small amount at any department store is an excellent article for cleaning behind the radiators.

Cookies and little cakes placed in an earthen jar with a few pieces of cut orange or lemon will be found to be delicately flavored when eaten.

Glass tumblers, when being filled with hot water, should be stood on a tray or table. They are thus far less likely to crack than if held in the hand.

Do not pour scalding water into vessels which have held milk. It cooks the milk on the sides of the vessel, making it more difficult to clean. Rinse first with cold water.

Omelets are more tender if the eggs are thinned with hot water instead of milk. Before folding the plain omelet, spread it, for a change, with a green pepper minced fine. The pepper does not need previous cooking.

Knife-cleaning may be made easier by dipping a piece of raw potato in the scouring material, rubbing with that instead of a cloth. The juice of the potato is not only a good cleaner in itself, but it keeps the scouring paste moist.

When baking a cake, if you have forgotten the flavoring, put a few drops on the layer, cover it with a pan and place in the oven. It will penetrate the cake and the flavor will be evenly distributed through the same as if baked in it.

If the ice man fails to arrive and you fear the milk will sour, wrap the bottles in a wet towel and place where a draught will blow over them all night—an open window is the best place—and you will find the milk sweet and cool the next morning.

Nature's Stamp of Approval Is Sugar.

Why do we always couple "sweetness and light"—with sweetness in the lead—as our highest conception of spiritual development? asks Dr. Woods Hutchinson in an article in Success Magazine. Why is it that in all literatures and legends "sweet" is invariably associated with "sound," wholesome—the scent of flowers, the song of birds, the golden sunlight—with everything that is pure and fresh and sound? Why is a sweetheart the most delightful form of cardiac motor that can be begged, borrowed or stolen anywhere? Why don't we say "sour as May morning," "alkaline" as the breath of kine, "bitter" as the nightingale's song, "nutritious" as the new-mown hay? Because deep down, instinctively, in the heart of us, we feel, no matter what the preachers or philosophers or the health journals may say that, to paraphrase Browning's defense of beauty,

If you get sweetness and naught else beside,
You get about the best thing God invents.

Sweetness is to the taste what beauty is to the eye—nature's stamp of approval and certificate of wholesomeness. It is one of the most universal flavors of foodstuffs known. Over one-half of our real foods taste sweet or sweetish—that is, they contain sugar in some form.

What New York Wastes.

New York City wastes officially $50,000,000 a year—this apart from the amount lost by theft and grafting, says Franklin Clarkin in an article in "Success Magazine."

This equals the losses of the Baltimore fire or the first cost of the Erie canal, or the national expenditures of the Kingdom of Sweden, or those of the Dominion of Canada.

It is more that Gerat Britain will require this year to pay its old-age pensions.

It is a waste of the energy of every tired straphanger, of the leisure which better transit facilities would yield the every day worker.

It is a waste of the wages of the poor. On these all frauds and extravagances of government finally bear.

It is also a melancholy waste of human life. The income from these wasted millions would stamp out not only tuberculosis, but also typhoid and diphtheria.

Most American cities are equally misgoverned, yet in the same world, with human nature just the same, there are many cities which administer so ably that they collect no taxes—some which actually pay dividends to their citizens.

Historical Footnote.

The prince of Orange had just refused, for the second time, to become the ruler of the united provinces.

"It would be too much like handing them a lemon," he said.

Thus we get a glimpse of the apparently artless yet masterful way in which William the Silent managed to make his name go thundering down the ages.

The rain last Saturday and Sunday was fine and did much good, but the wind beat the corn down very much in many fields.

Last Sunday morning the silo built last year on Rev. Scoville's farm was destroyed by the terrific wind storm.

We are informed that Mrs. J. H. Miller, who resides east of Butler, has been on the sick list lately and that she is getting better again.

We have been told that the Eberly family reunion will take place before long at the fine country home of Geo. Riser, one-half mile north of Big Run church.

Mrs. John Barber, of near Adrian, Mich., has been in this locality for a few days visiting her many friends and relatives. Her health is still poor, but it is hoped that a visit with her friends here where she lived many years will be for her good.

The barn of Peter Walter, who lives east of Artic, was destroyed by lightning last Sunday morning, with a clover huller and other contents. The clover huller was not the property of Mr. Walter.

Jacob Christoffel has been seriously ill lately and unable to go to Auburn as a witness in an important ditch case.

Miss Muma, of Butler, visited lately at the fine country home of Mrs. Bordner for a few days.

Mrs. Lucy was expected home Tuesday from Ohio where she has been on a visit for about two weeks.

Lee Reinhart had four acres of wheat which yielded thirty-eight bushels of fine wheat per acre. This is perhaps the best yield per acre in this part of the county. It is of the variety known as "Golden Cross."

Wheat and oats are yielding better than was expected. Seven hundred bushels of wheat and oats were threshed Tuesday on Mrs. Best's farms.

Peter Shoup says in two days he threshed 4,000 bushels of oats, and in the two days made several sets with his machine. Some may doubt this statement, but for proof ask Mr. Shoup and others.

Very many went to Auburn Tuesday and Wednesday to attend the great "Buck Creek" ditch case which started Tuesday in the circuit court. Some think the trial will last a week or two.

It is said that the minister who officiates in the church at Best's Corners, will preach his farewell sermon next Sunday, and that a good attendance is desired.

The picnic intended to be held in Wartenbee's grove last Saturday was put off until a later date. The rain Saturday perhaps had something to do with it being put off.

Since the fine rain last Saturday and Sunday the farmers have been very busy plowing and the ground is in fine condition for it.

Geo. Gunsenhouser and wife, A. Jennings, wife and others are entertaining company from Elkhart. Wednesday they met together at the home of Mrs. Losier, east of Newville.

Deputy Sheriff Hoff and a companion were here Tuesday to serve twenty-eight subpoenas on persons wanted to testify for the defense in the ditch case now going on at Auburn. People do not like to be hindered in this way, but they have to put up with it under existing circumstances.

A Piano at a Remarkable Price

Chicago's largest music house, Lyon & Healy, announces a gigantic alteration sale of pianos. Nearly 1,000 splendid instruments are offered without reserve until all are sold. In this stock are a great many standard and well known makes.

It is necessary to move this great stock of pianos in order to make room for carpenters who are replacing flooring.

In Upright pianos new instruments may be had as low as $145. This is an unprecedented opportunity and one that may not occur again. Any piano not proving entirely satisfactory may be returned at their expense.

Arrange a visit of inspection to their warerooms, corner Wabash avenue and Adams street, this week so as to avoid disappointment. 1t

THE way to reckon the cost of painting is to put both costs together—the cost of paint, and of putting on.

It costs as much to put on one paint as another; if you use as many gallons of one paint as another, the putting-on cost is the same.

But if you use Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint you'll use less gallons by half or a third. Hundreds of cases prove that Devoe requires less gallons than any other paint for the same service.

Buy by the name: Devoe.

BASKET MEETING AT EVERTTS' GROVE

Sunday, Aug. 22, marks the date of one of the most profitable and enjoyable days in the history of United Brethrenism in the Zion neighborhood. According to arrangements the people of Butler station and circuit, under the management of Revs. Parker and Wells, together with the general public, assembled at Evertts' grove for an all day gospel meeting, which was carried out to the complete and perfect satisfaction of all present.

The day was an ideal one for a grove meeting. The services were begun soon after the hour of ten o'clock, with songs and prayer, followed by a love feast meeting in which scores and almost hundreds gladly and joyfully took part. This service was led by O. B. Wells.

At a few moments past eleven o'clock Rev. W. F. Parker preached to the delight and help of hundreds from Mark 16:15-16—Subject, "Water Baptism, Its Place in the Christian Church." This message was timely and much needed, especially among United Brethren people. At twelve twenty o'clock tables and lawn dinners were spread all over the beautiful grove, then what took place goes without mention, all present partook with joy and were filled and peace reigned supreme.

At two o'clock services were opened by singing and a number of prayers, when Rev. Parker again preached from Acts 1:5-8—Subject, "The Baptism of the Holy Spirit; Its Needs in the Church of Today." This was a profound address, men and women of all classes being with perfect silence on the words of the speaker as he made his appeals for higher christian living and against the social and moral evils and intemperance of the age. Rev. Parker was at his best, and the sermon was one of great power and will be remembered in the life of many that were present.

At the close of this service the ordinance of baptism was introduced and carried out by Rev. Wells. There were twelve candidates, five from Butler station and seven from the circuit. This was a very interesting service and was performed under a deep spiritual devotion. The beautiful stream running alongside the leafy grove gave the scene a Jordan appearance which was highly appreciated by many of God's children.

Fire Loss a Million at Decatur, Illinois.

Fire at Decatur, Ill., destroyed a block of buildings, causing a loss estimated at $1,000,000. Following the fire Decatur faced a water famine. It became necessary to shut off the residence districts, the supply of water in the reservoir being low. While the fire was in progress a blaze was discovered in the engine room of the Decatur Hotel, situated a half block west of the district that was being destroyed. There was a panic among the guests, who realized that the firemen had a bigger job on their hands than they could handle, but prompt work by the hotel people extinguished the flames. In response to a call for help Springfield sent an engine and fire crew, and this gave the city four engines with which to fight the flames. The department was crippled by falling walls covering several hundred feet of hose. The burned buildings face on East Main street, Merchant street and Water street, and are in the very heart of the business district. Moorehouse & Wells, in whose building the fire started, occupied a modern six-story building. Their loss is complete and is estimated at $300,000. Other losses range from $10,000 to $70,000. The work of rebuilding the burned district will begin at once.

Touring Car is Struck by an Engine.

Mrs. George Granger, wife of a retired Kankakee (Ill.) merchant, and Miss Genevieve Rabig, 1619 Garfield boulevard, Chicago, were instantly killed and five other occupants of a touring car were seriously injured when the machine was run down on a crossing of the Big Four railroad in Kankakee, Ill. An engine and a caboose were backing down cars on the side track and obstructed the view of the automobile driver. The crew and driver saw the danger when fifteen feet apart, too late to stop the engine. Miss Rabig was a teacher of elocution at St. Xavier Academy, Chicago.

Wellman's Expedition Ends in Disaster

A dispatch from Spitzbergen says: Walter Wellman's second attempt to sail over the north pole in a balloon has resulted in failure. The giant dirigible balloon America, in which Mr. Wellman and his party of three set out upon their perilous flight, met with a mishap after it had proceeded about 32 miles from the starting point. Mr. Wellman and his party, succeeded in making a landing without injury to any member and returned to Spitzbergen on board the steamer Fram, which also towed in the disabled balloon.

TWO AUTO RACERS HURLED TO DEATH

Driver and Mechanician Crushed When Car at Indianapolis Skids and Upsets.

THIRD MAN DIES OF INJURIES.

12,000 People See Bourque and His Aid Thrown Over Fence to Their Doom.

With three lives sacrificed in the speed carnival, the first day of the automobile races at the new Indianapolis speedway closed with two time-annihilating records smashed. On the fifty-fourth lap of the 250-mile race for the Prest-o-Lite trophy, the feature event of the day, death in a terrible form came to William Bourque, daring automobile driver, and his mechanician, Harry Holcomb, when their big racing car suddenly left the track while plunging along at a speed of seventy-five miles an hour, turned a complete somersault and dashed both men against the fence which surrounds the course. Both were almost instantly killed. Their bodies were terribly mangled. Twelve thousand persons, gathered in the grandstand and around the track, witnessed the accident. Scores of women fainted at the sight. Others became hysterical and rushed screaming about the grounds.

Just why the racer left the track is a mystery. Whether Bourque lost control of the steering gear or made a mechanical blunder will never be known. The machine skidded, left the track, and with undiminished speed struck a small ditch which borders the speedway. Both front wheels and the axles gave way, and the car turned completely over. Bourque and Holcomb were sent flying through the air. Bourque was thrown against a post and his skull was fractured and both legs were broken. Holcomb was throw clear over the fence. His skull was also fractured and his legs broken. The third whose life was forfeited was Clifford Litterall, mechanician, who died from an injury received while on his way to the new speedway for practice. He jumped from his own car and was run down by one behind him. Driver Chevrolet had his eyes seriously injured by dust and tar.

AUTO KILLS THREE AT RACE.

Car Leaps from Track Into Crowd When Tire Bursts.

Three persons were killed and three injured by racing automobiles at the motor speedway in Indianapolis, Saturday. This makes a total of six lives sacrificed to the high speed mania since the opening of the tournament which dedicated the new race course recently constructed at a cost of $400,000 and supposed to have been accident proof. Two of the persons killed Saturday and one of the injured were spectators. The other person killed was a mechanic in the race. The spectators were run down when a big car in the 300 mile race left the track, plunged through a fence and into a crowd gathered near the speedway side.

When the National Six, driven by Charles Merz, a local pilot, burst the tire of the right front wheel while careening through space at a rate of seventy miles an hour, there was a crash and the great machine turned turtle, whirling like a gigantic rocket into the fence around the course. Over the barrier, jumping a bridge and on through space the car traveled like a catapult, leaving a trail of blood behind.

Fifteen minutes after this fatality another car skidded near the same spot, hit a portion of the bridge, and the driver and mechanician were injured. Following this, Referee Stevens stopped the race, which was for the Wheeler and Schebler $10,000 trophy, and in which the leaders had completed 235 miles. This brought the meeting to an abrupt end just when the prospects for a successful windup were brightest. With such a heavy baptism of blood it is thought the big speedway, representing an expenditure of more than $400,000, will never again be the scene of motor contests.

AUTO ACCIDENT KILLS FIVE.

Hurled Into the Water In Night, They Are Drowned.

Four young women and one man, the driver of the car, met death, and two young women narrowly escaped a similar fate at Seattle Thursday night, when a large touring car, going at a high speed, crashed through the railing of the long trestle over the Tide Flats at the point known to automobile drivers as "Dead Man's Curve." The tide was at flood when the automobile crashed through the rail and the victims were hurled into several feet of water.

BANK ROBBERS KILL AND WOUND

Surprised in Oklahoma Town, They Slay Marshal, Injure Cashier.

Two robbers, surprised while looting the State Bank at Kiefer, Okla., Monday night, shot and killed City Marshal Inford and probably fatally wounded Cashier Calmer Wobling. They escaped. A posse was quickly organized and hurried in pursuit. Cashier Wobling, who lives over the bank, was awakened by a noise in the bank shortly after midnight. Upon investigation he saw by the dim light burning in the rear two men at work on the vault door. Hastily summoning Marshal Inford, he procured a revolver. The marshal and cashier entered the bank by the front door while the robbers were busily engaged in drilling the safe door. A slight noise made by the city marshal attracted the attention of the robbers. The next moment they extinguished the light and then opened fire. After half a dozen shots had been exchanged, Inford sank to the floor with a bullet through the head. The next moment Wobling also fell, shot through the chest. Then both robbers hurried for the door and fled. The men had just succeeded in drilling the safe and were preparing to pour in nitroglycerin when surprised at their work.

BURN GAMBLING LAYOUT.

Bonfire Is Made of Paraphernalia Said to Be Worth $30,000.

A heap of ashes marks the closing scene in the fight between the State of Indiana and the owners of the gambling halls at French Lick and West Baden, respectively. Gambling paraphernalia to the value of $30,000 was publicly burned in the street at Paoli by officers of the law. There was a crowd of nearly 2,000 persons present when the expensive furnishings went up in smoke. Three years ago deputies raided the two casinos and made a number of arrests. The State confiscated all the furniture, including the gambling apparatus, but the courts held that there must be a conviction before the property could be destroyed. The cases against the arrested persons, who were the alleged agents for the owners, dragged along from term to term. A compromise finally was effected by which two of the indicted men should plead guilty on condition that the State would exempt from destruction such furniture as was not actually used in gambling. The pleas of guilty were entered, and the order to burn the gambling apparatus was issued.

SUITOR MAY BORROW.

Judge Says, However, Girl Should Not Lend Her Fiance Money.

According to an opinion rendered by Justice Goff, in the New York Supreme Court, it is not at all the classy thing for a young woman who is engaged to be married to lend money to her fiance. Justice Goff says it cannot be considered a crime for a man who obtains money in this fashion to omit the formality of repaying it, because he may be a trifler and his vow to wed may be a false one—a situation that rests entirely with the conscience of the party of the first part and over which the court has no jurisdiction.

8 KILLED, MANY HURT IN TROOP-MOB BATTLE

Pennsylvania Strikers' Attack on Stockade Is Repulsed by Constabulary.

MANY OF THE INJURED MAY DIE

Sheriff Goes to Scene of Fight with Riot Guns to Re-Enforce State Soldiers.

Eight persons are known to have been killed and many wounded, at least ten of them fatally, in a strike riot at McKees Rocks, Pa., Sunday night. Like an eruption of a volcano, 4,000 Pressed Steel car workers let all their hatred, pent-up bitterness and lust for blood come to the surface, and, with precaution thrown to the winds, made a battlefield out of the Schoenville district. At least eight men were killed—one State trooper, one deputy sheriff and six strikers and strike breakers. Scores were injured by bullets. The battle resulted from an attempt of the strikers to storm the barricade around the Pressed Steel Car Company's plant, where hundreds of strike breakers have been quartered for the last six weeks, during the strike which has been marked by much bloodshed.

Following the battle deputy sheriffs and troopers broke in the doors of many houses suspected of being the retreat of the strikers and wholesale arrests were made. Scores of persons were arrested and placed in box cars in the mill yards. During the early stages of the rioting women were conspicuous. Some of them were armed, others effectively used clubs and stones. These women, all foreigners, insane with rage, were mainly responsible for inciting the men to extreme measures.

The battle was the climax of a series of riots that have been occurring almost daily since the beginning of the walkout more than five weeks ago, at the Pressed Steel Car Company's plant. The conflict between the strikers is the worst in the history of Allegheny County since the bloody Homestead riots, in which over forty were killed, and one of the most sanguinary in the history of the State.

When Sheriff Gumbert heard of the battle while he was at the county jail he called for fifty men to serve as deputies at the strike zone. Obtaining that number he went in an automobile to the scene of the rioting. He took with him ten riot guns and two boxes of ammunition. By the time the sheriff arrived the constabulatry had dispersed the rioters, but the guns were placed into position ready for use in case the battle should be renewed.

TRAINS HELD BY WATERS.

Great Delay and Inconvenience Due to Colorado Floods.

Trains blocked in lonely mountain passes, tracks washed away or in some instances pitched into canyons hundreds of feet below, people driven from their homes to seek safety with their belongings in higher places—these were the scenes revealed along the overflowed Arkansas River in Colorado.

The famous Royal Gorge, walled in by rock 1,000 feet high, was washed by a torrent for about forty-eight hours, and the railroad tracks have been destroyed. Trains on the Colorado Midland, the Denver and Rio Grande and other railroads, most of them carrying eastern tourists, have been detoured over circuitous routes. One road had to hear its trains by way of Alamosa, Colo., in the southern part of the state, a distance out of the regular travel of more than 300 miles. Not only the Arkansas River, but almost all of its tributaries are overflown.

EXTRA SESSION COST $500,000.

Uncle Sam Pays Out Large Sum to Pass Tariff Bill.

Further investigation of the cost of passing the tariff law shows that before Uncle Samuel gets through footing the bills of the lawmakers incurred during the special session he will have to pay out close to $500,000. The principal item of expense is the mileage, because every member of both houses is allowed mileage at the rate of 20 cents a mile from his home to Washington for every session which he attends. By the time the Senators and Representatives from the Pacific coast put in their bills this account is pretty big. Members of the House get just $154,000, while Senators took away from the Treasury $47,000 for traveling expenses. Extra pay for the employes of the Senate amounted to something more than $73,000, and as there are many more clerks, messengers and other workers on the House side it is estimated that the pay for extra services of the employes was almost $100,000. The urgent deficiency bill carried an item of $25,000 for general expenses, and it is said that most of this was used for expediting the passage of the tariff bill. The official reporters of both houses got about $10,000 to pay extra clerk hire and other expenses.

MEN IN MINORITY IN CHURCH.

Census Report Shows Women the More Religious Sex.

Standing out as a conspicuous feature of a bulletin issued by the census bureau entitled "Census of religious bodies," is the fact that out of a church membership in the United States in 1906, of nearly 33,000,000 men formed considerably less than half of the total. Of the total church membership reported by the various religious bodies and classified by sex, 43.1 per cent were men and 56.9 per cent were women. Among the Protestants the difference was greater, only 39.3 per cent being men, while in the Roman Catholic Church the men formed 49.3 per cent of the total membership. Fewer men than women were found among the Latter Day Saints, the Lutherans, Disciples, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Protestant Episcopalians, the percentage of men members decreasing in the order shown, and there being only 35.3 per cent men among the Episcopalians. Among the Christian Scientists, only 27.6 per cent were men, and of the Shakers, only 21.3 per cent, but in the Greek Orthodox church, 93.9 per cent were men.

HUSBANDS MAY "CUSS" WIVES.

Judge Says They Can Get Drunk, Too, but Mustn't Beat Mates.

Can a wife cause the arrest of her husband if he uses profane language to her? Can she have him arrested if he threatens to desert her? Can she have him arrested if he returns home intoxicated?

Municipal Judge Gemmill, of Chicago, says no, and emphasized his position by refusing to issue a warrant to Mrs. Giuseppe Tolino. She said her husband came home intoxicated and swore at her. "No wife has a right to cause the arrest of her husband unless he beats her," said the court. "The statutes read that a wife cannot testify against her husband, except in personal violence and desertion cases, and I won't issue any warrants for husbands unless one of these are the grounds. If husbands swear at their wives, the latter cannot have them arrested."

FOIL BIG COUNTERFEIT PLOT.

Police and Secret Service Men Unearth Fraud in Kentucky.

Because of the manufacturers' delay in shipping a perforating and numbering machine, $1,000,000 in counterfeit Mexican money was seized at Louisville and the counterfeiters arrested. So far as is known, only three men were concerned in the bad money plot, which is one of the most extensive ever unearthed by the secret service department. They are John C. Roberts and Marion Roberts, brothers, and a printer. The $1,000,000, all in 100-peso notes, was contained in a heavy, brass-bound trunk. John Roberts declared that had his numbering and perforating machine arrived when he expected it, he would have been safe in Mexico a week ago, with most of the money disposed of. The 100-peso notes are excellent imitations. They are said to have been made in Louisville.

The barley crop of Minnesota is uneven this season and the average yield will not be heavy. Rye is better. Wheat will be a very heavy crop and corn was never better than it is at present.

The small grain of the Dakotas and Minnesota is maturing rapidly. Barley claimed the attention of harvesters early and the work was pushed strenuously in anticipation of the ripening of other small grain.

The corn crop of South Dakota is expected to be the largest ever raised in that State. The corn made rapid strides during the hot weather. Farmers in the vicinity of Sioux Falls report that their corn has reached a growth of six feet.

FORTY-FIVE SAVED AS STEAMER BURNS

Fifteen Are Rescued After Being Thrown Into Illinois River by Breaking of Gangplank.

OFFICERS STOP A PANIC.

Modern Jim Bludso Sticks to Post After Being Badly Injured, Then Escapes in Rowboat.

Forty persons, half of them women and children, narrowly escaped death the other afternoon when the steamer Fred Swain was burned to the water's edge in the Illinois River near Peoria. Two men were seriously injured. With the flames sweeping over the deck the pasengers became panic-stricken and threatened to crowd each other into the river as they fought for places in row boats, which were put out. To add to the confusion and danger the ropes supporting the gang plank were burned and fifteen persons, most of them women and children, were thrown into the water.

The steamer belonged to the Peoria and LaSalle Packet Company. With Captain Verne Swain in command it had left the Peoria port on its way to La Salle. Twenty-five passengers and a crew of fifteen were on board. At 3:20 o'clock the flames were discovered issuing from a stateroom on the second deck. Captain Swain, realizing that the vessel was doomed, ordered Pilot Martin Huston to beach the boat and instructed his crew to deal out life preservers. The smoke and flames meanwhile had been observed from the shore and a score of row boats were hurried to the scene. Women were shrieking and children were crying as they waited for the boats to take them away from the threatening holocaust.

The packet had been piloted into four feet of water in a patch of small willow trees when occurred the accident that dumped fifteen persons into the water from the gangplank. The men and women were able to make their way to safety, but four children who were among them, would have perished but for two men, who half-carried and half-swam with them to tree stumps, which protruded from the water, to await the arrival of the rescuers. Captain Swain and Engineer Casrider were the last to leave the boat. After guarding against an explosion, Casrider went to his pumps and remained there until the flames licked him about the face and body. A row boat had been left for him, but when he finally abandoned his station the boat had caught fire. He got into the boat, and, beating the flames from him and rowing with all his might, managed to get to shore.

The loss is estimated at $35,000, of which $30,000 is on the vessel. Several passengers lost all their personal belongings. The Fred Swain was built at Clear Water, Minn., ning years ago, and was one of the finest packets plying the Illinois River.

ALABAMA TO BE VERY DRY.

Drastic Fuller Prohibition Bill Is Passed with Little Opposition.

The drastic Fuller prohibition bill passed by the Alabama Senate forbids even the possession of liquor except in private residences, making the accused person prove his own innocence before any evidence against him is introduced. It makes the use of the word saloon a crime, bars the advertisement of liquors from bill boards and signs and holds that even the possession of a Federal liquor license is an absolute proof of guilt in selling intoxicants.

Monthly Expense on the Canal.

Reports from Panama show that the fiscal year which closed June 30 is the record year for expenditures since the United States took possession of the zone. The monthly average was $2,700,000, and in January, 1909, the record month, more than $3,250,000 was expended.

The report shows that the actual expenses up to this time reach the total of $104,177,884, exclusive of the $50,000,000 paid for the canal.

Viaduct in Collapse.

In Chicago ten persons were injured—two of them seriously—when a board foot walk on the Twelfth street viaduct collapsed. Without warning the structure on the south side of the viaduct, which spans the Pennsylvania railroad tracks at Holden street, fell, precipitating pedestrians to the railroad yard, fifteen feet below.

"Unwritten Law" on Books.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Dunn's review of local trade conditions says: Evidences of the improved state of trade generally become more distinct. The most notable feature is the rapid accumulation of forward work in the principal industries. Some complaint already appears that supplies are not promptly delivered, and there is also some fear that transportation facilities will be found inadequate to handle the increasing freight offerings. In both the volume of payments through the banks and the record of trading defaults are found sustaining indications of a healthy condition in credits. Heavier movements appear in grain, raw materials, factory outputs and general merchandise, and there is more production in iron, steel, wood and leather working. The general demand for money has become extended, and the discount rates for choice commercial paper are firm at 4½ to 5 per cent despite the fact that many large concerns as yet seek little accommodation.

Hot weather raised some alarm as to its effect on corn growth, and this forced a moderate rise for the leading grains, but flour has remained weak and late advices indicate that temperatures now favor agriculture. Visiting buyers from many sections throng the jobbing district, and there is considerable activity in dry goods, footwear, clothing, food products, furniture and house needs. Bank clearings, $253,188,504, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 17.6 per cent and compare with $221,123,655 in 1907. Failures reported by the Chicago district number seventeen, against twenty-nine last week, twenty-four in 1908 and fourteen in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number six, against seven last week, six in 1908 and two in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Jobbing trade and manufacturing industry tend to expand as the vacation season wanes and harvest possibilities grow into certainties. From a number of markets, however, come the reiteration of reports that purchasers take hold conservatively and that retailers are still cautious buyers. Currency shipments to the country are enlarging and money correspondingly firmer. Something like a sobering process has been witnessed in the security market, which is lower all around. Perhaps the most encouraging features reported this week come from a few of the leading industries. Iron and steel buying has become more confident, railway purchasing being in evidence and premiums are being offered for early deliveries of materials intended for manufacture.

The higher range of prices for cereals, particularly winter wheat, has encouraged the movement from the farms, and the number of idle cars has decreased, with talk of a car shortage before the close of the year.

Business failure for the week ending Aug. 19 were 183, against 219 last week, 230 in the like week of 1908, 153 in 1907, 155 in 1906 and 176 in 1905.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

CHAPTER X.—(Continued.)

With both hands outstretched, she fluttered towards Mathilde, who had been studying some unusual signs of discomposure in her husband's manner, but of what kind she could not exactly define.

"I hardly think we require an introduction," the little woman said, holding Mathilde's hands. "I am sure that Jem must have told you of his cousin Nellie, hasn't he?"

Even if Mathilde had been readier with an answer than she was, it would have been her husband who spoke first, and at the sound of his voice she knew that there was war in it.

"How am I to win forgiveness if I plead guilty to never having done so? Let me atone now, and present my cousin, Miss Nellie Fearon, who in the foolish days of her teens, once thought that she could put up with my humble self as a fiance, but who, under stress of duty, changed her mind."

It was rather a heavy-handed blow from a man to a woman, and Mathilde knew that the woman felt it by the suddenness with which her hands were dropped, and by the wavering of her color.

Her smile, however, never wavered, and she was ready enough with a retort.

"Oh, you bad man, how can you make me look so idiotic, and the first time, too, that your wife has met me!"

But now Mrs. Herbert came to her rescue.

"Nellie, dear, do let James speak to Mr. Harter," and now it was the parson's turn to greet the husband, and be introduced to the wife.

As they took their places at table, Mathilde noted with admiration a sign of Mrs. Herbert's skill. The table was perfectly round, and there being no seat directly facing Stewart's the difficulty of place was avoided. The meal was not as tedious as she had expected, and it did not seem long before the women were back by the drawing-room fire, and the men safe in the smoking-room.

Miss Fearon fidgetted about, carefully arranged a pile of soft cushions, glanced at a fashion paper, and then cooed:

"Flora, dear, I am sure you will excuse me if I run away for a few moments to finish a little scribble for the post," and with a smile she fluttered out of the room.

Then, as Mrs. Herbert leaned back in her chair and folded her hands, Mathilde felt that she was delivered into the hands of the enemy, and prepared for action. The attack began at once.

"I am sorry to hear that you were not satisfied with your rooms. If you had told me so at once I could have given directions about it then, without giving James the trouble of speaking to the housekeeper."

Here was, in truth, a weak joint in her armor. Mathilde devoutly hoped that the other might be too short-sighted to see her rosy confusion.

"Oh, the rooms are delightful," she answered hastily. "But one of my husband's fads is space, and he is always spreading himself and his possessions over as much ground as possible."

"Indeed," came very dryly from the other. "I should hardly have thought that he had been accustomed of late to such spacious mansions."

But now her antagonist spoke with more spirit.

"It may be the deprivations of the last ten years which have deepened his zest for the comfortable and pleasant things of life. You can hardly understand, I think, how much he enjoys everything."

The widow sighed aggressively:

"No doubt he enjoys the change of prospects, but he should remember that the uncertainties of life which gave him those prospects may also make them as ashes in his mouth."

Mathilde suddenly saw that she had been all but openly dwelling on the benefits caused by the death of her listener's husband, and gasped horrorstruck: "Oh, I did not mean that he was not sorry for your loss."

"It does not matter," the other answered with a smile of patient resignation, then with a return to her more mundane manner, she added, "I trust, my dear, that the unexpected meeting with dear Nellie would not distress your husband. It was so stupid in me not to prepare him for it."

"Why should it distress him?" The question was short and incisive.

Mrs. Herbert seemed a bit flustered.

"Why, my dear, don't you know? I wouldn't for the world make any trouble, and I would not have spoken if I had not thought that you knew; but at the time of his"—she hesitated—"of his misfortune, he was engaged to Nellie, and her parents insisted on breaking off the match. Poor, dear Nellie behaved very sweetly about it, and wrote him the most touching letter imaginable."

"How romantic!" remarked Mathilde. "And but for me it would have been quite the orthodox ending to the third volume, to-night."

"Oh, my dear, I am sure——"

"Thanks; don't worry yourself; I am not of a jealous disposition."

Mrs. Herbert looked relieved. "How sensible! And now, my dear, as we are getting on so well together, just let me say one little thing quietly to you. You'll promise me not to mind, won't you?"

This is never a reassuring question, and Mathilde answered wisely, "We'll see."

"Oh, no; I'm sure you won't. You see I have been feeling all the evening that it would be kinder to tell you that English ladies don't wear so much jewelry on quiet occasions like this. Of course I understand that it is quite natural under the circumstances, but strangers might be amused."

Mathilde was by now thoroughly roused, and spoke with each word clearly:

"I appreciate to the full the kindness of your intentions. Perhaps it will relieve you to know that I was sophisticated enough to be aware that there were unsuitable ornaments for the occasion, and only wore them at the express wish of Sir James——"

Here, fortunately, perhaps, for the interests of peace, the men made their appearance, and the duel was suspended.

That first night under her husband's roof Mathilde suffered a terrible lapse from heroism and cried herself to sleep in regular school-girl fashion.

CHAPTER XI.

When Matilde looked back on those first weeks spent at Orkwell they seemed to have passed in a far easier fashion than she had anticipated.

There were morning hours spent beside Sir James' arm-chair in his room, or midday ones by the bath-chair that he loved to have wheeled into a great conservatory, where he could bask in the sun, and see the choicest collection of flowers from the houses which he had made famous in the county.

More than once or twice Stewart came on their little group, and surprised a tender expansiveness in her face and voice, which faded at his approach into the familiar, half-shy, half-reserved dignity.

Then there were long outdoor hours passed in her husband's society, either riding or driving about the country, and these hours generally left her brighter, and with a more resolutely cheerful view of the situation.

The first time that Mathilde had been alone with Stewart after the evening of their arrival, Miss Feason formed the topic of their conversation. They were walking through the beech woods, chatting, when Stewart gave an abrupt turn to her thoughts by asking:

"What did you think of the surprise last night?"

"What surprise?" she retorted, although she guessed what he meant.

"The reappearance upon the scene of my first love. I wonder why it was done," he went on thoughtfully. Then, after a moment's pause: "Did you think me very brutal to her?"

Mathilde's face had hardened, and her voice was very cold.

"I supposed that there was some feeling on your part which caused, and perhaps justified, your outspoken remark. Otherwise, I must confess I think it might have been better left unsaid."

He cast a keen, sidewise glance at her, and then laughed gaily.

"You thought it the ground-swell of some past storm of lover's quarrel. Poor little Nellie! She was about as much a present issue in my life as the rabbits I petted as a child. No, my remark was a preventive one as to any mischief that they might be up to with you."

"Mrs. Herbert did try it a bit after dinner," she agreed, in a less stony voice.

"But why should you include Miss Fearon? She must have cared for you once, even if meeting you again in that fashion was not painful to her."

Again he laughed.

"If you will persist in constructing a romance out of the affair, you must have the whole of it. You needn't distress yourself about Nellie's feelings. If she minds anything now, it is the loss, not of me, but of the heir. Then, she was glad enough to have a good excuse to get rid of me, for she had had a bit of success in town, and thought that she might do better than a younger son. And I, for my part, had been learning her unreality for so long that after her valedictory letter she seemed to fade from my mind like an old photograph. The loss of her, certainly, hardly added a pang to those of the debacle."

"But that does not explain why you distrust her now."

"It's not so easy to explain. It's more an instinct than a reason, but your safest plan is to take her enmity for granted."

"That seems a rule of universal application," she answered, bitterly.

"What, not losing heart already, when you have swept all before you with my father?"

"I am not losing heart," was the proud answer. Then she added somewhat wistfully: "I really think he likes me."

"Improbable as it seems, I really think he does," he retorted, looking into her face as he put out his hand to help her over a stile, with a glance that brought on one of her shy fits, and set her talking to the Irish setter, Nomad, whom she had adopted as her own special follower and friend.

The first change in the situation came when, one morning at breakfast, Stewart looked up from his correspondence, never very large, to announce generally:

"Here's a letter from Normian, saying that he is coming over from Paris to see me. Wonder how he heard of my getting home, for though I have been meaning to write to him ever since I came, I haven't done so."

Mathilde, looking up as her husband spoke, saw a tell-tale change of color on Nellie's face, saw, too, an interchanged glance between the two women which left her no further doubt as to their secret alliance.

It was only a momentary thing, then Nellie spoke in her pretty, babbling fashion.

"Oh, I hope you won't thing me a dreadful gossip, but I was writing to him the other day about some old paste buttons that he is getting me, and I put in all our news to fill up. How you had come back after all sorts of hard work and roughing it, with a Canadian wife who looked like a princess, and had taken everyone's heart by storm."

Mathilde had heard them speak before now of this Norman Stewart, cousin, and after James, heir, now attache over in Paris.

This news of his approaching visit filled her with grave misgivings, for his tastes were said to be artistic, and she feared their orbit might have crossed.

"What role shall I have to play with him? My Paris life must be altogether hidden, I suppose?" she asked her husband anxiously, as they paced the south terrace, sunny and sheltered on this winter morning, and well removed from all chance of listeners.

"I've been thinking it over," he answered, "and I don't see why you should not be altogether your self with him. As I said before, the more you stick to the truth about yourself, save for the last five years, the simpler it all is."

"A large exception," she said. "Then the role of the 'habitant' woman is altogethed dropped."

"That is what I wished from the first," he agreed gravely.

She paced on in silence, staring out over the quiet, dim winter landscape that stretched below, with eyes that had in them the sullen fire of one held in bondage.

Suddenly she spoke. "What are your feelings about this cousin? Do you consider him a friend or an enemy?"

He was not quick to answer her.

"We grew up together, and were always chums. When the crash came, he tried, in a mild way, to help me, and came and saw me off at Liverpool. I have every reason to consider him a friend, and his letter is very cordial; and yet—he is the next heir to me, and is in communication with those two. He might very well think that he, too, would have a shy at the disposable cash. Yes, we must both be on our guard."

"Oh, what a wretched entanglement it is!" she broke out. "How much better it would have been if you had come home alone and faced it out. Anything would have been better than this."

"Not at all," he remarked with urbanity. "Fancy life in this cheerful mansion, unenlivened by your society, or by the uncertainties of warfare."

"That is what a pickpocket might say," she retorted.

"Exactly so," he agreed. "I always had a strong fellow-feeling for the criminal classes. But I am forgetting one piece of good news for you. My father has the solicitor over this morning to finish up the business of the will in my favor. What do you think of that?"

They were standing by the balustrade, facing each other, and she looked up at him and marked the change wrought in him since those first sea days, the cheerful energy replacing the old cynicism.

"I am very glad," she said simply.

That afternoon, Stewart, having gone off on some business of the estate, Mathilde spent in her own sitting-room. As the tea-hour approached she sat struggling with a desire to have her tea brought to her here, instead of going down to the library.

How she hated that twilight tea-time, when a certain amount of conversation had to be got through, and she thought herself lucky if she could turn Mrs. Herbert on to the subject of missions, or Miss Fearon on chiffons, rather than have to answer questions of a personal nature.

She started at her maid's appearance to know if she would go down to tea.

"Oh, yes, I suppose so," she answered lazily, and then made a move in the abrupt fashion of one resisting the temptation to delay.

Part of the house was built round a courtyard, and on the upper stories, corridors ran round this square. The servants had been later than usual in lighting up, and the corridor that she passed along was almost in darkness.

There were light below though, and as she glanced carelessly down, she looked across a near angle into the room which Stewart had taken for his own den. One of the candles on the writing table had apparently been hastily lighted, and the shade not replaced. Against the table Stewart was leaning, still in his riding things. His back was turned to the window so that she would not see his face, but she saw that his hand rested on the shoulder of Nellie Fearon, who stood quite close to him, her pretty, upturned face wet with tears, and lit by a depth of feeling that Mathilde would not have supposed to be a possible outcome of her nature. She stood there in the chill, dusky gallery, with her eyes fixed on the tableau framed in the lighted window below. So this was the reality, and the loyal comradeship and alliance was the pretense.

ORIGIN OF THE DOG.

In His Wolf Days He Was a Hanger-On of the Camps of Men.

As to the origin of the dog we should be inclined to conjecture, says the Abolitionist, that the presence of wolves as hangers-on of the camps of primitive man suggested to him the possibility of their domestication, and then by feeding them directly from his hand when hard pressed by hunger, or by taking charge of and bringing up the wolf cubs, some wolves became domesticated, as they seem to be now among the Indians and Eskimos, and from these domesticated wolves the dog race of that region was gradually evolved, choice in breeding being employed to develop the qualities most useful to man.

It must be remembered that the remarkable thing about the dog is not the survival of its primary instinct, the instinct of the chase, but the substitution as a dominant motive of some ruling aim outside itself adopted to please its master and friend, man. To illustrate what we mean, let us take the collie or sheep dog, which, as we have seen, comes very directly from the wolf and retain the physical evidence of this origin. The dominant instinct of the wolf is to chase and kill and eat sheep whenever he sees them, but this dominant natural instinct, while it does break out in an occasional collie, is yet in the great majority of collies completely overcome by a desire to satisfy his master's confidence and merit his master's approval by showing himself to be the guardian, protector and guide of the flock. The failure of a few collies, the success of the majority, to resist the primary instinct to chase and kill the sheep, the foresight and skill with which the guilty dogs endeavor to conceal their sins, their evident consciousness of guilt, their almost human shame when discovered, point to a moral nature in the making.

When we come to think of it the whole-hearted devotion of the collie to his divinity—man—and to what the dog nature knows of the moral law reads often a much-needed lesson to his master. A collie has been known to remain without food guarding the flock and to be found by his master after days of starvation deliberately endured rather than leave his charge, only able to crawl to his feet and die. Even the strong maternal instinct has been unable to overcome the collie's sense of duty, and a collie, in charge of sheep, that has pupped on the way has repeatedly been proved true to her charge, giving her primary attention to the flock and her secondary attention to her puppies. The capacity for enforcing order and discipline in the flock is another very human and very remarkable quality in the collie, not derived, apparently, from its wolf ancestry. The collie knows the art of government. His woolly dependents are trained to obey his slightest orders and to accept his will as law. He rules them resolutely but kindly and, while he punishes insubordination, will risk his life to protect them. The sheep dog in foreign lands, for instance, in the Spanish Pyrenees or the Sierra, will unhesitatingly face the wolf or even the bear, with a kingly readiness to sacrifice himself in defense of his other wise defenseless subjects.

True to Training.

Generous Lady—Here, my little boy. I know you are hungry for a box of these animal crackers.

Boy—Much obliged, lady, but my folks is vegetarians.—Judge.

WOMEN AND FASHION

Girls in Business.

Women have learned much of business-like ways since they have been in business. But some girls still take a position with the idea that they are conferring a favor upon their employer, that they will be of such invaluable assistance to him that he will not object to certain little liberties. Or else they lie back on the fact that they are women and he is a man, and consequently out of his sense of gallantry will permit certain laxities. Still others actually fail to realize that the business office is not the home.

Perhaps one of the most abused of these privileges is the telephone. What office doesn't know the girl who is constantly being called up on the telephone by her numerous friends? If she has a fair amount of vanity she secretly rejoices that her fellow-workers have the opportunity to find out how popular she is. If she is inexperienced, she thinks her employer won't mind a little thing like that.

Business is business. It means an honest return of time and energy for the salary received. Exactly that. It doesn't mean entertaining one's friends, using the telephone, writing letters on the firm's paper, using the firm's postage stamps and many other little liberties the young business girl takes.

Trifles they seem to her, fresh from home life, but they do not belong to the ethics of business. The girl who really wishes to serve her employer honestly will do none of these things.

Treatment of the Hair.

In washing the hair avoid strong soaps, alkalis such as soda and ammonia, hair tonics of which you are not sure, and too much hot water. These all dry up natural oil and make the hair harsh, dry and given to falling.

Depend on regular brushing of the hair rather than on tonics. Ten minutes' stiff brushing twice a day will do wonders for thinning hair.

Keep the hair absolutely clean. This may be assisted by a dry shampoo if a wet one can not be given frequently.

For a dry shampoo powder the hair and scalp well and brush until every particle of powder is gone.

Hair should always be thoroughly dried, as the mingling of water with natural oil causes fermentation, which means dandruff and falling locks.

Give the hair plenty of light and air, but do not expose it to the hot rays of the sun for long at a time. It bleaches the hair and often blisters the scalp, drying up the natural oil.

So long as the scalp moves freely over the skull there is hope for the bald head.

Be particular not to use the brushes and combs of another, and see that you do not use your own when in an insanitary condition. One reason for the baldness of men is due to their carelessness in this respect.

Do not burn your hair, twist it into tortuous knots, strain it back from the temples or wear it always in the same coil.

For Eruptions.

Ringworms have been cured by bathing in the juice of strawberries. It is not easy to imagine a simpler or more agreeable remedy. Strawberries are said to be a sovereign remedy for ulcers as well as for ringworms. For eczema of the face recourse should be had to poultices made of potato farina. A decoction made of the fresh root of starwort (15 grams to one quart of water) is highly recommended. Take a pint of the decoction before eating, in two or three doses; the other pint at night, at least two hours after the last meal. The diet must be very strict—no wine, no coffee, no game, fish or pork of any kind. Strawberries, asparagus, cabbage, turnips, cheese, are forbidden. The same diet is prescribed for pimples.

Keeping the Hall Uncluttered.

The mother of a family of growing children spent many unhappy moments because those children threw their playthings, garden tools, baseballs and bats, tennis racquets and other belongings in the first spot in the hall they could find. Talking did no good, neither did punishments. Finally a friend suggested making a box of the wooden benches that stood on each side of the front porch. This proved such a convenient storing place, easy to put away and equally easy to find again, that the hall and downstairs rooms noticeably improved in neatness. Another mother had boxes built into the steps of a side porch, and here the children kept all their outdoor belongings.

To Secure a Restful Night.

Don't let the youngsters romp too much just before bedtime.

Don't read them exciting stories late in the day.

Don't send them to bed hungry, nor just after a hearty meal.

Beef stew, lamb chop, roast beef, roast lamb and certain delicate fish may be given to children under 10 once a day at the midday meal.

Ham, sausage, pork, liver, dried and salted meats should be withheld until after the 10th year.

To Peel Oranges.

Pour scalding water over the oranges and let them stand five minutes. You will save time in peeling them. The thick white skin that is so hard to get off will come off with the outside peeling, and the fruit will be ready to slice.

Why Hair Turns Gray.

A German anthropologist has been upsetting many theories and ideas long prevalent regarding gray hairs. One is that any sudden fright or shock may turn the hair gray. He says that examination of the minute pigment cells at the roots show that their constituent qualities never alter. The baby of a few months has the same color in his hair cells as he will have when he is a white-haired man of 70. The turning of hair to gray is a natural process. Hairs with pigment of strong color fall out and are replaced with hair of a different shade, which are either poor pigment or have none. Gray hairs, therefore, are not those which at one time were colored with pigment and have become bleached, but are new hairs and have become bleached either through sickness or inherited peculiarity.

Finding Dinner Partners.

A novel plan for pairing off girls and men at dinner parties, one which takes the responsibility of this feat off the hostess and is often productive of interesting and amusing results is in the form of a game, which is concerned with likenesses of taste. The hostess makes out a list of modern novelists, for instance. Each name she prints twice, on separate slips of paper. Each set of slips is dropped into a hat or on a tray and passed among the girls and the men respectively. The different members of the party pick out their favorite writer and the man and woman who agree in this selection are partners for dinner. Musicians, artists, famous paintings, poems and various other persons or things may be utilized in this way. This method often gives rise to considerable interesting conversation, particularly where there are one or more strangers in the party.

Reaction After Bath.

If you do not react well after your bath try what vigorous rubbing of all parts of your body will do. This may either be a dry rub, with alcohol, or aromatic vinegars can be used. Rubbing the entire body with the palm of the hand has a good effect not alone on the skin, but on the circulation. Where the hand will not reach with any force double the crash towel or take a long strip of flannel and, holding it in both hands, draw it vigorously from left to right. This is a good gymnastic exercise as well as beneficial to the skin.

Fixing Old Chairs.

If you have old rush-bottom or cane-seated chairs and do not want to go to the expense of having them recaned, try making a seat for them at home. Cut away carefully the caning and nail strips of girthing tightly across the opening. Cover with a piece of fine fiber matting or burlap, just the shape of the seat, but half an inch larger. Turn in the edges all around and nail to the chair with brass-headed tacks for studding. If the woodwork has grown shabbby, buy a preparation that quickly removes and softens the varnish and scrape with pieces of glass. The chair can then be done up with any desired stain.

Chic Tailored Model.

Here is a product of the millinery art of Paris along the lines of the tailored hat. As in all branches of dress the French designers hold a position of undisputed superiority, so in this line they have reached the hight of beauty and style without sacrificing the severe lines considered proper for this style of headgear. The model shown is of rough straw in old blue, the brim stiff and rolling high at the right and back. The under brim is faced with a finer black straw and around the crown is a wide band of black velvet tied at the right in a stiff bow.

Slumber Bags.

Slumber bags of heavy wool in plain colors are replacing the steamer rug for deck use by many travelers. The bag laces up to the neck and is provided with a hood. It is especially good for the convalescent.

Overcoming Mildew.

A cure for mildew that is the remedy of an old negro laundress, is excellent for all white goods and will not injure fine materials. Pour a quart of boiling water over two ounces of chloride of lime, add three quarts of cold water, let the mixture stand until settled, strain and it is ready for use. The material should be steeped in the lime water for a day or over night, when the spots will be found to have disappeared.

Fall Fashions.

The advance fall fashions are extreme.

The overskirt seems to have arrived and not only the plain article, but the elaborately draped affair.

Sleeves are to be absolutely plain across the top in most cases, which at least gives a graceful shoulder line.

The hat shape turned up in the back is back again and this of course means a different style of hair dressing.

The pannier has come back and many of the new dresses will make the short woman look like "Mother Bunch."

Hats are to be large, judging from the new models brought over. They will be trimmed with enormous aigrettes and huge flowers.

Fullness of all kinds has returned. First it appeared at the bottom of the skirts in the shape of plaits. Now it is seen quite boldly around the hips.

Of course the waist line comes down to its normal position and it is laced in rather tightly. All kinds of contrasting belts with rosettes will be worn. In fact, this is to be a fluffy season.

Brightening Faded Frocks.

Some one may have a pink cotton or linen dress all good, but badly faded. If so, put a piece of Turkey-red cheesecloth in water and boil till the color is right. The desired shade may be obtained by dipping a little of the dress. It will dry a bit lighter than when wet and will leave an even color all over. One-eighth of a yard is more than enough for a dress. Navy blue cheesecloth may be used in the same manner to freshen the color of a light blue dress.—Woman's Home Companion.

EFFECT OF THE COIFFURE.

Photographs of the same woman, showing how the arrangement of the coiffure changes the face.

Being a Woman.

To be a man is the simplest thing in the world—he has only to be as nature has chosen. But the strenuousness of a girl's life begins when she is quite little. At all ages women must keep up appearances, but the ever-present necessity to be better looking than she really is and to maintain some illusion about herself is only one of the difficulties of being a woman.—Australasian.

Re-Covering the Parasol.

To re-cover a parasol cut an exact pattern from an old cover, using one panel for pattern. Use white mercerized pongee, wind all the ribs with white ribbon, stamp a chrysanthemum in each panel, embroider it with white pearl luster, put a bow on top and one on the handle, and the result is a pretty parasol.

Scour with Kerosene.

When you have scoured until you are tired and rust still remains on nickel-plated faucets or steel knives, before throwing out the knives and huving the faucets renickled, try saturating the spots with kerosene.

Selecting a Life Partner.

Peaches were given as favors at the reception, the peach basket of the romance was exhibited and incidentally the bride wore a peach basket hat.

Practically all the horses in Bartholomew County understand English as she is spoken and several of them have a slight acquaintance with German, but it is believed that only one horse understands Greek. This animal is Maggie, a black mare, owned by Zaharako brothers, owners of a candy store in Columbus. He was instructed in the proper commands to give the horse but he gave it up as a bad job and began speaking Greek exclusively. The mare understands every Greek command.

Nice Things to Worry About

They are talking about its being an eight billion dollar harvest this year, and some people are worrying whether there will be money enough to move such a vast amount of crops to the proper markets. The interstate commerce commissioners also predict a big shortage in freight cars. No doubt there is some cause for concern along these lines. But, after all, it gives one a comfortable sort of feeling to think that the crops are so large that the chief problem is how to dispose of them to the best advantage. It is a whole lot nicer to worry about that sort of thing than to be disappointed in the size and value of the crops themselves.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trifled with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today and get a dollar bottle. Then after you have used the entire contents of the bottle if you can honestly say, that it has not done you any good, return the bottle to the druggist and he will refund your money without question or delay. We will then pay the druggist for the bottle. Don't hesitate, all druggists know that our guarantee is good. This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family. The large bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

Kodol is prepared at the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

THE BUTLER PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Will Open September 6, 1909—Everything Points to a Successful Year

Monday, September 6, our public schools will open with Superintendent H. R. Bean in charge. Mr. Bean has successfully piloted our school through three terms and is entering upon the fourth year with everything pointing to a fruitful harvest for the gleaners of knowledge. His educational qualifications are of the very best, and as a disciplinarian he easily ranks with the best. He will be ably assisted by J. Leroy Austin as principal, and the following corps of experienced teachers:

Assistant principal, Maude S. Armstrong; seventh and eighth grades, Will Endicott; sixth grade, Honore Albertson; fifth grade, Muriel Baker; fourth grade, Besse Wiley; third grade, Ada B. Mountz; second grade, Phosa Scoville; first grade, Achsa Beechler.

Mr. Endicott, Honore Albertson and Besse Wiley are the new teachers, the excellent qualification of the others being well known by our readers. Mr. Endicott is from Galveston, Ind., and comes highly recommeded, being a senior of the Indiana University and has had several years experience as instructor. Miss Albertson and Miss Wiley are both well qualified for their work.

The Butler schools have been considerably improved during the last four years and at present rank with the best schools of Northern Indiana, meeting all the requirements of the state both as to common and high school courses. It has been a commissioned school for several years and has reached a state of efficiency not to be surpassed in this part of the state.

Not only have we the best corps of teachers possible to secure, but we also have all the advantages connected with up-to-date schools. A building modern in every way—well heated, lighted, ventilated and has a gymnasium in connection.

Prof. Austin has gained quite a reputation as an instructor of science and history, this part of the high school work often times being sadly neglected.

Those desiring to learn further of the excellence of the Butler schools may inquire of any pupil who has attended within the last four years.

It is hoped that the citizens of Butler will show their appreciations by visiting the school as often as possible and note the progress of the same. It would be a good thing if the business men would take turns about in giving practical talks before the school; we are sure Superintendent Bean will be pleased to have them do so.

It is quite necessary for each pupil who expects to attend this year to enroll on the first day. The new readers adopted by the state board will be used by the common school. We understand that those having old readers can get the exchange price at store where old books were purchased.

Death of Little Janet Plowe

Last Monday morning occurred the sad death of little Janet Plowe at the home of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Masters, after a brief illness of four and one-half days.

Mrs. Bertha Masters Plowe and two children, Harold and Janet, just six weeks before had come here for a two months visit from Bad Ax, Mich. The family were all well and happy until the Wednesday previous to the child's death, when she was stricken with enteritis and in spite of all help succumbed rapidly to the dreaded disease. The relatives watched tearfully over the little form and Saturday evening the grief stricken father arrived after a long hard journey only to see that the cold hand of death was rapidly closing over the life of their darling.

Janet was born at Bad Ax, Mich., Dec. 12, 1905, and died Aug. 30, 1909. She was a great favorite with all her people, and the cords of love have indeed been torn assunder by this parting.

The remains, accompanied by parents and grandparents, were taken to Bad Ax for burial on Tuesday morning.

"And the mother gave in tears and pain
The flowers she most did love.
She knew she should find them all again
In the fields of light above.

Oh, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The reaper came that day;
'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
And took the flowers away."

F. W. SWANTUSCH WRITES FROM ALASKA

Seattle, Aug. 11. We took a sightseeing car at 2 p. m. and had a trip of 30 miles through principle business and residence parts of the city. The next day we spent at the Exposition grounds. The exposition is more extensive than the Portland was. The Alaska building was most interesting to us. There were more gold nuggets displayed than ever was seen at any other exposition. One nugget is valued at $3,609.00. There are also many interesting sights on Pay Streak. This is the same as the Pike was at St. Louis. On the 13th, we left Seattle on the steamer, Dolphin, for a 2,400 mile trip, taking in the south eastern part of Alaska. This is a coast trip. We foillow the channels, straits, sounds and narows. We have the finest and most picturesque mountain scenery in the world. We pass thousands of little islands. After two days out, we came up to snow-capped mountains with glaciers to which we were very close at times.

On the third day we had an experience which does not occur perhaps once in a lifetime. It was in the evening about 7 o'clock, most all the passengers were on the deck watching the whales spout. This was in the Frederick Sound. Here a whaling station is located and we passed many whaling boats. We first observed one spounting a half-mile ahead. In a few minutes it was to the surface again and was about 300 feet ahead. It just disappeared below water a moment and then arose directly in front of the ship and the next instance we struck him. At jarred the ship enough to scare the Captain who was in his cabin. He came running out to see what we struck. We had the opportunity of looking down into the spouting nostrils of the whale just before we struck him. The reason we happened to strike this one was, there were two of them playing together and they did not notice the ship approaching. The one we did not hit was so close that it rubbed the side of the ship. We arrived at Skagway Alaska, Aug. 17, at 3:30 p. m. and did not leave until 11:00 p. m. So that gave us time to take in the whole town. We walked about two miles to Soapy Smith's grave. He was a noted character in his day, whose last deed of note was to shoot the Sheriff and the sheriff shot Soapy who died first. After we hear remarks about Butler being dead we can say that it does not compare with this town which was one time a booming town, as there are at least two-thirds of the business places and houses vacant. They have good facilities. They have a fine lake 600 feet above the city for water power and water works. Here the White Horse Ry. starts, which is 110 miles long. The fare is $40 for the round trip. This road takes you to the White Horse; here you can take river boat down to Dawson. All provisions come up on steamers and are transferred to the White Horse Ry. for the interior of Alaska. This town is nestled between mountains and at the foot of them.

The next place we stopped at was Sitka, at one time capital of Alaska. It is a small place, about 500 inhabitants. Its location is an ideal spot about a mile from the open ocean and on an island surrounded by many pretty little islands. It seems to be going down hill. We were up to see the Russian cemetery from which we could take a view of the complete town and its surroundings. There was one old Russian block house standing and is many years old. In this town were more Indians than white people. We saw them as soon as we landed. They are squatting on the warf where we land, with their wares which they want to sell. These Indians are very different in looks from those in the states. They are short and stout and very quiet. They live in houses and shacks and seem very peaceful. Uncle Sam has a post station here.

Leaving Sitka we turn south and stop at Treadwell Gold mine. Here we were escourted by a guide through the largest gold mine in the world.

This is a quartz mine and they have 800 stamp machines. They run day and night all the year round except Christmas and the 4th of July. They employ 1600 men. They have taken out 35 million dollars and they say they have just begun. They are down 1,600 feet. We had a peep down the Glory Hole about 300 ft. deep.

Three miles from Treadwell we came to Juneau. This is the capital of Alaska. It is the best town on the coast. It has modern houses and business places. It is built at the foot of a mountain. They have opened a mine in this mountain which they say will surpass the Treadwell mine as soon as they get sufficient water to run it.

Leaving Juneau at 11 p. m. we were called the next morning at 5 a. m. to see the glacier, This is a live glacier, the ice sliding down continually. We saw several ice bergs about 200 feet long. There was ice all around us. The engines were shut down and the ship was allowed to glide through the ice. Occasionally we could hear the ship grating on the pieces of ice.

The next place we stopped was a salmon cannery. We saw the complete process of canning and were shown through the refrigorator where there were many varieties and sizes of fish, some halibut there that weighed 150 lb. The labor in these factories is principally done by Indians.

The next morning we stopped at Ketchikan. Here we saw more live fish in water than ever before. They were so close, same as sardines in a box. These fish were salmon, not less than 2 pound and up to ten. These fish came out of the salt water and were going up the fresh water creek. They were laying below a rapid which they were unable to ascend. They work very hard and get badly battered. We saw several with their heads badly jammed. It was not much of a trick to go into the water and pick up fish with your hands.

The next stop was at Metlakahtla, the most progressive Indian town in the world, situated on Annette Island. A missionary by the name of Duncan came here years ago and educated the Indians so that they manage their own town and also a cannery. They have a very large church with a seating capacity as large as the M. E. church at Butler. From this place we have a 52 hours run to Seattle and do not stop at any more ports. In regard to climate, it does not get colder than 10 below zero and it does not reach this point very often. It is dry and clear in winter time, but rainy in the summer for at least eight months, but the rain does not affect a person like it does at home. I got my feet wet twice and did not experience any ill effects.

The dogs that are used to travel in to the interior of Alaska are worth as much as our horses, from $100 to $200 a piece and it requires at least 5 of them for a team.

The strawberry, raspberry and blackberry grows wild and in abundance and average much larger in size than ours at home. The avergae will measure 3 inches around. Flowers have much brighter colors here than at home.

I will give prices of a few items which I heard. Eggs $3.25 per dozen, butter 65 cents per pound, flour $4.00 per sack, oranges, bananas, apples, pears, peaches, etc. $1.00 per dozen. Beefstake, 75 cents per pound, bacon 40 cents.

Fatally Injured

I. J. McFadden received a telegram Thursday morning that his son, Finley McFadden, had been fatally injured in an automobile accident at Chicago. Mr. McFadden left for Chicago on the 9:30 train Thursday morning. Further particulars are impossible to get this morning, but will be given in our next issue.

THE FACTORY PROPOSITION STILL HANGING FIRE

Now Past the $10,000 Mark—Committee Still at Work—Have You Done your Duty?

The committee to raise the $13,000 for the stove factory are still at work. Over ten thousand has been subscribed, but the work has got to a place where every dollar counts. A large number of our citizens have subscribed liberally, while there are some who have not yet done anything. However there is time yet for those who have not donated to do so.

Every person who will be benefitted directly or indirectly cannot afford to stay out. The proposition is certainly a good one, and if Butler is ever going to make a break, now is the opportunity. It is said that success knocks once at every person's door, and we believe this is success knocking at our door, and to lose this opportunity would certainly be a step in the wrong direction. A number of those who subscribed a few days ago have raised their subscriptions and others ought to do the same.

Don't be pessimistic in the matter, friends, you can not afford to. It means too much for our people, and should not be allowed to die at this stage of the game and we have confidence enough in some who are acting indifferent in the matter to believe that they will yet do their part in the matter. Don't wait, friends, go now to the committee and put your name on the list. It will come back with interest.

THE POOREST PAID MEN

Are the Trustees Who Transact Our Township Business

Some very true remarks are made by the Angola Republican when it says:

"The most annoyed, poorest paid man in all the catalogue of public offices is the township trustee. His position necessarily compels him to enter into nearly every school district controversy and such troubles are rarely adjusted without much bitter feeling, and no small share of it is heaped upon the trustee. He has to deal with the poor of the township who ask for assistance, decide between the worthy poor and those who would be injured by being helped; look after the cleaning of the ditches in his jurisdiction, employ teachers, selecting half dozen or so from a list of nearly fifty worthy ones, and to the poorest paid teacher be compelled to pay twenty cents per day more than the salary he is to receive when he works, not counting the long hours when he thinks and worries and gets no pay."

And the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette adds: "The same arguments only in a greater degree, apply to the county commissioners, the men who render the greatest service to the people and are poorest paid of all county officials."—Courier.

THE DRESS QUESTION

ANYBODY CAN make clothes, but we know it takes brains to make good clothes.

WE KNOW that every man wants up-to-date style, good material and superior workmanship.

WE KNOW the correct and latest styles; how to fit the tall, the slim, the stout, the thin.

WE KNOW that the cloth we use is pure wool, for the "all wool" guarntee is STAMPED ON EVERY YARD.

WE KNOW that the trimmings and workmanship we put into your garment are the very best because they have stood the test.

NOW THAT YOU KNOW what we know you know WHO your tailor should be.

Not every man knows how to make fine clothes;
But the man who knows and knows he knows,
Is the right man—follow him.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Hot Jelly Kills Infant.

Death from scalds received in a big kettle of boiling jelly was the fate of Gladys, the 5-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Hoppel, 913 Liberty street, Fort Wayne, Ind. The little baby fell from her sister's arms into the kettle of boiling liquid and the lower portion of her body was badly burned. The infant was taken to a hospital, where death relieved its terrible suffering in a few hours. The little sister, Helen, from whose arms the infant fell, was also scalded by the liquid splashing on her, but is not thought to have been very seriously injured.

Boys Try to Wreck Train.

An attempt by four boys to wreck the Chicago Express, south-bound, on the Illinois Central railroad, near Kankakee, Ill., was discovered by a switching crew in time to prevent an accident to the train, which was crowded. The boys had placed rails at a switch south of town. Werly Smith, Sam and David Blatt and Clayton Robertson, ranging in age from 14 to 16 years, were arrested near the scene of the intended wreck where they were awaiting developments. They admitted placing the obstruction on the track, and said they just "wanted to see a wreck."

Sisters Plunge to Their Death.

In an effort to save themselves from being swept over a dam in a rowboat, two sisters, Mary and Corrine Willett, aged 22 and 17 years respectively, daughters of Charles Willett, a farmer living near Tiffin, Ohio, locked arms and plunged into the swiftly moving waters of the Sandusky river at St. John's bridge, seven miles south of Tiffin. Their bodies never rose to the surface. The girls were rowing and got into the swift current and made the fatal plunge to gain a wall a few feet away. The bodies have not yet been recovered.

Big Diamond Theft in Chicago.

Diamonds said to be valued at $12,000 were stolen from Mrs. Adolph Hirsch at the Vendome Hotel in Chicago. Mrs. Hirsch carried the jewels into the dining room at luncheon. They were in a black handbag which was hung on a vacant chair at her table. She returned to her room and then missed the bag. Upon her return to the diningroom the bag was gone. Several detectives were immediately placed upon the case but were unable to secure any tangible clues.

Houses Sink Into Old Mine.

Fully $200,000 damage was done in West Scranton, Pa., by a mine cave. Abandoned workings called the "Cork and Bottle" colliery of the Fairlawn Coal Company, which ceased operations twenty years ago, gave way under an area equal to two city blocks, which sank from six to eight feet, throwing houses from their foundations, cracking walls and otherwise damaging buildings.

Dynamite Explosion Kills Twelve Men

As a result of the explosion of 700 pounds of dynamite at Bocachia, twelve miles from Key West, Fla., on the Florida East Coast railway, twelve men are dead and five others seriously wounded. The explosion was caused by a member of the railroad construction force carelessly throwing a lighted cigarette in a box of fuses.

Two Boys Killed by Traction Car.

Jacob Garber, 16 years old, and his brother Alfred, 14, were killed when an Indianapolis Northern Traction car struck a wagon in which they were driving at Kokomo, Ind. Their parents were visiting at Matamora, Ill., when the news of the death of the boys was telegraphed to them.

Falls Under Thrashing Machine.

George Beavers, aged 14 years, son of Samuel Beavers, living near Bedford, Ind., met a terrible death near his home. In attempting to climb on the stacker of a thrashing machine that was being moved he fell with his head under the wheels.

Speedway Owners Held Responsible.

The owners of the new Indianapolis motor speedway are held responsible for the several deaths that occurred in accidents during the automobile races August 19, 20 and 21 in the Coroner's decision just made public.

Aged Clown Dead.

William Shafer, who is said to have been the first clown that traveled with Dan Rice's circus, is dead at Newton, N. J., aged 83 years.

Suicide of Bank Employe.

M. L. Ottman, Jr., 30 years old, a clerk employed at the Metropolitan National Bank, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head in the directors' room of the institution in Pittsburg, Pa.

Five are Killed in a Feud Fight.

In a feud fight between the laborers employed on the farms at Juriquilla, Texas, and those of Santa Rose, a nearby village, five men were killed and one fatally and ten seriously injured.

RAILWAYS ARE READY FOR CROP MOVING

Great Surplus Supply of Box Cars Being Sent West to Carry Grain.

BIG DEMAND WILL BE MET

Gradual Increase in Transportation Business Shown by Report of Committee.

The crop moving season in the Middle West and in the great grain belts will not find the railroads napping. According to the fortnightly report of the committee on relations between railroads of the American Railway Association a great supply of surplus box cars already is in the section of the country which will first feel the demand for cars and in which the most serious car shortages occur. The latest report of the committee records that throughout the country there are 159,424 surplus cars, a decrease of 93,579 from the corresponding period in 1908. The largest decrease was in box cars, in which class the surplus was reduced 21,141. The surplus number of this class of cars at the present time is about 80,000, and half of these are in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas, known as group 6, awaiting the call for crop moving purposes.

Before the crops really begin to move a still greater number will be sent West to meet the estimated demand. The report of the committee also shows a gradual increase in railroad business as measured by the demand for cars from April, 1908, when the financial panic struck full force. On April 29, 1908, the number of surplus cars reached the highest point in the history of American railroads. At that time nearly 500,000 cars were standing idle in yards and on sidetracks. By the following August, when the panic had spent its force, this number was reduced to 253,003. During the last year the climb has been gradual, and it is estimated that in the latter months of the year the crop moving will call into use nearly every idle car in the country.

WILL BE BILLIONAIRE AT 80.

Rockefeller's Wealth Now $700,000,000 and Is Steadily Increasing.

If John D. Rockefeller lives till his 80th birthday, and he has said he will reach 100, he will become the first billionaire in history. In the last two years Standard Oil, the wonderful automatic money-making machine of his creation, has increased his fortune $80,000,000. This is the increment of the rise in value of the stock alone. The latest approximated accurate estimates available place his fortune in 1905 at at least $550,000,000. In 1900 it was $400,000,000. This is an increase of $150,000,000. At this ratio the Rockefeller fortune is to-day about $700,000,000. In 1914, still at the same ratio of increase, it will be about $850,000,000, and in 1919, when the oil king reaches his 80th year, it will have reached the stupendous, brain-giddying total of $1,000,000,000—an inconceivable sum.

J. D. ROCKEFELLER.

In September, 1907, it was estimated by Rockefeller's closest associates that his income was at least $30.25 a minute. Some figures placed it as high as $40 during the same space of time. The sums earned for him by Standard Oil alone have been tremendous.

FINDS BIBLE NOT ORIGINAL.

U. of C. Professor Says Pagan Beliefs Have Aided Christianity.

The Bible is not original with its supposed compilers, according to the opinions expressed by Professor Gerald B. Smith of the faculty of the divinity department of the University of Chicago. "The story of creation and the deluge appeared long before the Bible was written," the speaker declared. "Both of these stories were traditional in the early literature of the Babylonians.

"The theologian of to-day is acquainted as the theologians of former days were not, with the reality and vitality of non-Christian religion, and in the investigation of the Old Testament religion it has been found that many of its elements were derived from Israel's contact with Babylon. The history of Christianity reveals the fact that Christian beliefs have grown and changed as Christianity has met with the secular forces of its history. There are elements in every pagan religion which every Christian is compelled to recognize as truth. The question must be raised whether the contact with oriental peoples, which is to be so prominent a factor in the near future, will not mean that Christianity will be influenced and modified as it has been in the past."

3,261 WORDS NEED REVISION.

Simplified Spelling Board Publishes List of Suggested Reforms.

The simplified spelling board, which began its reforms three years ago with an unassuming list of 300 words, now publishes an index of 3,261 words in need of revision. Some of the newcomers are. Hed for head, and, similarly, spred, helth, etc.; words ending in "ice" and pronounced "is" as justis, copis, cornis; delv for delve, carv for carve, and many others that make the unfamiliar eye squint.

UNCLE SAM CAN FEED THE WORLD.

TAFT TO URGE POSTAL SAVINGS.

Will Ask Congress to Keep Party's Pledge as Soon as Possible.

President Taft has indicated in talks with callers that in his message to Congress next December he will strongly urge the early establishment of a postal savings bank system. The President realizes that there is strong opposition to such legislation and, while he does not propose to rush Congress on too many matters at once, he will ask that the platform declaration of the Republican party in favor of postal banks be fulfilled as speedily as possible. Influential members of the Senate and House are urging that the matter be left over until the monetary commission has made its report and ensuing financial legislation has been disposed of. It even has been said that the relation between the subjects to be dealt with by the monetary commission and the postal banks is so close that the two should be handled together. President Taft believes that several hundreds of millions would be placed at the disposal of the government through postal savings banks.

PREDICTS USE OF SUN'S HEAT.

British Scientists' President Says Engineers Will Utilize Rays.

The seventy-ninth annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science opened in Winnipeg. The annual address of the president, Sir Joseph John Thompson, was of interest. Referring to the almost unparalleled activity in many branches of physics, the speaker said he had not the slightest doubt that engineers would ultimately succeed in utilizing the heat of the sun directly for power, "and when coal is exhausted and our water power inadequate," he declared, "it may be that this is the source from which we shall derive the energy necessary for the world's work."

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

John Gates, 2:19¼, is now owned by J. H. Hopkins, of St. Paul.

Hamburg Belle failed in an effort to break her record of 2:02¾ at the North Randall track, Cleveland, 2:03¼ being the best she could do.

Before 5,000 people at Scarbori Beach Park, Toronto, Alfred Shrubb ran Tom Longboat off his feet in seven and one-half miles of a twelve-mile race.

An offer for a match between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson has been made by the directors of the Tulcare County (Cal.) Agricultural Association, who claim the backing of fifty business men willing to subscribe $50,000.

John Welch, of Lexington, Ky., is pushing a movement to have the affairs of the Latonia Agricultural and Fair Association investigated. Welch is one of the stockholders and if his statements are found to be true the attorney general of Kentucky will probably take steps that will result in Latonia forfeiting her charter.

A new world's record in the hop-skip-and-jump was made at Boston by Daniel F. Ahearn, of the Irish-American A. C., of New York, who made the distance of 50 feet 2.7 inches.

FATAL CRASH IN AUTO RACE.

One Killed, One Perhaps Fatally Hurt at Brighton Beach.

Leonard Cole, a mechanic of the Stearns car in the twenty-four hour automobile race at the Brighton Beach track, was killed and Laurent Grosso, the driver of the car, was perhaps fatally injured in an accident. The crash happened just beyond the clubhouse as the cars were bunching to take the turn. Cole was crushed under the machine and instantly killed. Grosso was thrown to one side and his spine fractured.

The fatal accident came a moment after a minor sensation. The score for the first hour had been given out when the Fiat and the Allen-Kingston came into collision. The latter machine caught fire, and the 10,000 persons in the stands had a thrill, as it appeared to them that somebody must be in the flames. Announcement was made as quickly as possible that nobody was hurt, and the spectators had settled down again when the fatal collision occurred. The Stearns car was a complete wreck. Cole was found under the wreckage and was pulled out dead.

The Indianapolis motor speedway commission is held responsible for the deaths of William Bourque and Harry Holcomb, driver and mechanician of a Knox car in the automobile races in that city recently, in the finding of Coroner Blackwell. Bourque and Holcomb were among several persons killed on the course during three days' racing. The coroner in his report says the speedway was not properly built for racing.

ALABAMA TO BE VERY DRY.

Drastic Fuller Prohibition Bill Is Passed with Little Opposition.

The drastic Fuller prohibition bill passed by the Alabama Senate forbids even the possession of liquor except in private residences, making the accused person prove his own innocence before any evidence against him is introduced. It makes the use of the word saloon a crime, bars the advertisement of liquors from bill boards and signs and holds that even the possession of a Federal liquor license is an absolute proof of guilt in selling intoxicants.

Girl Is Human Pincushion.

A few days ago a bent and headless pin was taken from the arm of Miss Adelina Wyckoff, 16 years old, of Paterson, N. J., and since then sixteen similar pins have been extracted from the arm. Miss Wyckoff's parents believe that when she was a child she probably swallowed the pins.

RAIL KING RETURNS.

Harriman Shows Feebleness as He Leaves Liner, but Is Optimistic.

Ten pounds lighter than when he left America nearly two months ago, but with his spirit unbroken and breathing a sentiment of optimism, E. H. Harriman returned Wednesday to take what he quizically calls the "after cure." Though Mr. Harriman cheerfully declared that he was feeling "pretty well," he showed in every movement, every intonation of the voice, that he is a sick, tired man, a dispatch asserts. He is sallow, almost yellow, and his step as he greeted friends who had boarded the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II. at quarantine was noticeably feeble. The best description would be that of a man convalescing from a great and serious illness.

At his magnificent summer home at Arden, N. Y., the so-called "$1,000,000 fortress," Mr. Harriman began the "after cure," for which the treatment at Bad Gastein and other European resorts was a preliminary. He is constantly attended by his family and a corps of skilled physicians. How long he will remain in seclusion, how long it will be before he resumes the active direction of his vast railroad interests, depends solely upon his health. He arrived feeble, face gaunt and voice weak.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

The Legislature of Georgia came to the end of its session without having permitted the federal income tax amendment proposed by Congress to come to a vote.

Maryland Democrats favor a suffrage amendment to the State constitution to be voted on this fall. The suffrage amendment will disfranchise the illiterate negro.

President Taft plans to placate the insurrectionary Middle West during his forthcoming Western tour by making a series of speeches explanatory of the Payne tariff bill.

The "drys" won the local option election in Santa Rosa County, Florida. The saloon element ordered the election and sought to regain territory lost to them by election two years ago.

The President has decided to have the census appointments divided equally among Democrats and Republicans in the States of the solid South which are wholly Democratic, in all other States the Republicans to get all the places.

Since the adjournment of Congress the word has been passed around among the leading Democrats of the Empire State that the time had come for a new effort to revive the genuine simon-pure Democratic spirit in the party councils. It is proposed to hold a general conference at Saratoga on September 9.

The Connecticut Senate agreed to defer until the next session of the Legislature the consideration of the federal income tax amendment to the constitution. Gov. Weeks has vetoed the liberal Sunday law, passed by the Connecticut Legislature. It would have repealed the old blue laws.

Advocates of equal suffrage are planning a campaign which will emanate from Boston as a starting point. Those who are enthusiastic in the campaign see in its culmination the election of Jane Adams as a future President of the United States.

Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, while addressing the Chautauqua assembly at Correctionville, Iowa, said: "The best thing that could happen to this country would be to have all of the States doubtful. That is, have half of the voters so independent in thought and action that they will vote irrespective of party in order to advance the ends of good government."

1,200 ARE DROWNED IN MEXICAN FLOODS

15,000 Made Homeless and Property Damage of $12,000,000 at Monterey.

RAIN DESCENDS FOR 72 HOURS

Adobes Swept from Foundations by Score—Light Plant, Darkened, Aids Horror.

Twelve hundred persons drowned, 15,000 homeless, and property damage to the extent of $12,000,000 is the result of a flood which struck Monterey, Mexico, between 11 and 12 o'clock Saturday morning. For seventy-two hours rain fell in unprecedented volume throughout the section, and the Santa Catarina River rose gradually. At first it was thought that there would be no loss of life, but the water had a height never before attained and swept buildings from their foundations by the score. The electric light plant was put out of commission before night, and the complete darkness was an added horror. Cries of the drowning could be heard, but the onlookers were powerless to render aid. The entire suburb of San Luisito was swept away. The Santa Catarino River was a raging torrent, many of the streets in the city proper being under water. The great steel plant at Monterey suffered a loss of nearly $1,000,000 by the flood, and the smelter of the Mexican Lead Company was cut off from the city and submerged. It is estimated that the loss at this plant will be over $3,000,000. The flood is the greatest since 1881.

The Santa Catarina River runs almost directly through the center of Monterey. Along its right bank is located the suburb of San Luisito, inhabited by the poorer element. It was in this section that the greatest loss of life occurred, for the greater part of the suburb is composed of one-story adobes. When the flood waters struck these buildings, of adobe, they collapsed as though composed of paper and buried their inmates beneath a mass of debris in such a manner that they had absolutely no opportunity to escape. Many families having experienced other floods, remained in their dwellings until compelled to seek refuge on the roofs, but too late, for they found themselves entirely surrounded by water and absolutely at the mercy of the stream.

150 HAVE PELLAGRA AT PEORIA

Army Officer Reports on Conditions at State Asylum.

More than fifty cases of pellagra, with fifty additional in a state of recovery, and fifty more under suspicion at the Peoria, Ill., State hospital, are reported to the War Department by Captain Joseph F. Siler of the army medical corps stationed at New York, who was sent to Peoria at the request of the hospital officials to investigate the outbreak. Captain Siler is of the opinion, according to the report, that the disease has long prevailed, not only at the Peoria hospital, but throughout Illinois, as well as through the great corn growing States of the West. Overdependence on corn as an article of diet, and especially the consumption of corn in a moldy or nearly moldy state, is given by the army surgeon as the probable cause of the disease.

The discovery of pellagra at the Bartonville institution several weeks ago has attracted the attention of the entire world of medicine to that point, and many other physicians are working with Capt. Siler in his attempt to get all the data on the disease in its various forms and stages.

QUAKE IN ITALY.

Province of Siena Shaken, Causing Panic and Injury.

A heavy earthquake was felt throughout the Province of Siena, Italy, Wednesday. Practically all the houses in San Lorenzo were destroyed or badly damaged. Many persons were injured. The quake was felt most severely within a radius of twenty miles from Siena. Considerable damage was done at Buonoconvento. Several houses collapsed and one person was killed. Several persons were injured at Monteroni. A number of houses also were damaged there and masonry fell into the streets. Siena itself escaped with a severe shaking. The people were badly frightened, however, and rushed out of their houses into the streets, where they wandered about in a state of semi-panic until they were assured that the quakes were over.

Siena Province has an area of 1,470 square miles and a population of 233,000. The city of Siena is at an altitude of 1,000 feet and counts 30,000 inhabitants. San Lorenzo, Buonoconvento, Monteroni and Piombino are villages with populations ranging from 1,000 to 4,000.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Dun's Review of Chicago trade during the week, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

Trade generally reflects the progress looked for, production and distribution of finished products and necessaries being distinctly enlarged and the demand for money stronger at the recently advanced discount rates. Heavy consumers are now protecting their future requirements, with the result that enormous bookings are made for 1910.

New contracts in the prominent industries become notably extended, particularly for rails, structural steels, pig iron, cars, wire and forge and foundry outputs. Prices of most supplies show further firmness, while furnace product and minor metals cost more and lumber turns dearer for some grades.

The markets for foodstuffs indicate wider activity. Breadstuffs show easier price tendencies, but live stock and provisions bring the highest average values this year, and east bound rail shipments of the latter gain over both last week and a year ago.

There is seasonable attendance of outside buyers in the markets for general merchandise. This adds strength to the absorption of fall and winter wares, sales being encouragingly good in the textiles, footwear, furniture and house furnishings. Prolonged warm weather has lengthened the buying of light weight apparel at retail here and throughout the interior and stocks are reduced gratifyingly.

Bank clearings, $253,057,985, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 25.4 per cent, and compare with $212,233,530 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 17 last week, 24 in 1908, and 24 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 6 last week, 5 in 1908, and 8 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Trade and industrial tendencies are still in the direction of improvement. Impetus is given these movements by the beginning of the cotton harvest at the South, by the completion of the spring wheat harvest in the Northwest and on the Pacific coast and by the gathering in of other products of agricultural interests in various sections of the country. In commercial lines jobbing trade still has the center of the stage, and reports are practically unanimous that buyers' excursions are stimulating fall demand as the close of the vacation period approaches. Retail trade, still largely deals with the disposal of summer goods, mainly at concessions. In wholesale and jobbing lines of dry goods there is still in evidence cautious buying, particularly of lower-priced cotton goods, which have been marked up in price, buyers apparently clinging to the idea that lower quotations are possible in some lines. While irregularity is noted in this direction, however, the price situation holds strong as a rule.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Aug. 26 were 201, against 183 last week, 236 in the like week of 1908, 167 in 1907, 138 in 1906 and 161 in 1905.

Failures for the week in Canada number 32, against 29 last week and 27 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

A Hazard of Hearts

By ALIX JOHN

Copyright, 1900, by Frank Leslie Publishing House

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

Who that knew the whole story would say that she had aught to complain of, secure in her place and possessions; but, ah, woe for that happy dream that had brought the smile to her lips, but half an hour ago, by her fireside! Blindly, stumblingly, she found her way back to her own room, with the one instinctive idea of shelter.

She knew it all now—knew the real cause of all the bitterness, of all the happiness of the last three weeks.

Spurred by her own tormenting thoughts she sprang up from the sofa where she crouched, and paced the floor, as many a jealous woman has paced before. And then, afraid that any further delay in joining the tea-time group in the library might bring her a visit from her husband, she lit a light and carefully inspected herself in the glass, and then with a composed, if weary face, went down stairs. She found Flora and Nellie sitting in the firelight, and with one quick glance saw that there were no traces of tears on the latter's face, at least none that could be seen in that uncertain light.

She joined in their discussion of winter dresses and London tailors, and in her pre-occupation betrayed a knowledge of the subject which brought from Nellie the remark:

"One really would think that you had never been out of England."

Her answer was ready enough.

"It's the easiest and cheapest way to get one's things sent out. Most people do it."

Then Stewart came in, announcing that he had just been to look for her, and she asked about the incidents of his day, in quite as expansive a fashion as was usual with her.

How well he looked in his riding things, and in what good spirits he seemed. She watched him exchanging some commonplace remark with Nellie, to whom he always talked a little more than to Flora, besides, Mr. Harter had come in, and, as usual, was sitting a little apart with that lady, deep in discussing schools and clubs.

The old, fire-lit library formed an ordinary picture of domestic life.

When they separated to dress for dinner, Stewart followed his wife upstairs, and at the door of her sitting-room said:

"May I come in for a few minutes? There is plenty of time."

"No, there is not," she answered pleasantly, "for I promised Jeanne to try on a new dress. I've put it off three times," and she went in and closed the door.

CHAPTER XII.

Some hard hours for Matilde lay between bed-time and the next morning's late daylight, hours when she was free to let the passion of pride and jealousy and bitter shame sweep over her unchecked.

But by the time that she roused herself from a late short sleep, her resolve was shaped. She would play her part, and carry out her share of the bargain, and then, when the battle was won and she had done her best in it, she would demand her freedom—freedom to go live her own separate life. Let him enjoy the place and the money which he had made use of her to win; she would have none of it. And so, once again, as she thought, she was facing life with no strong arm behind her. Strange to think how unconsciously she had been leaning on Stewart's strength!

By some coincidence, Stewart had that day for the first time gone off early to a meet. This made it easier to her to come forth and face the world.

Mathilde seemed destined to come unexpectedly on Miss Fearon's interviews, for when, in the course of the morning, she went at her usual hour to join Sir James in the conservatory, she saw that lady seated on a low camp-stool beside him, and holding in her hands a letter, from which she had apparently been reading him extracts.

The letter was hastily folded as she approached, and the reader looked up with a slight heightening of color.

"Don't let me disturb you," Mathilde said coldly; but the old man stretched out an eager hand to hers.

"You couldn't disturb us, my dear. Nellie is just giving me Norman's news, which is only a few hours ahead of himself."

Nellie looked decidedly disconcerted, as though she had not intended Mathilde to know whom her letter was from.

"Oh, I often bring my morning budget to give uncle bits out of my day's gossip! But I must run away now, for dear Flora wants me to go down to the village," and with her usual flutter Nellie was off.

"Good little girl, good little girl," Sir James mused. "But she wouldn't have done for Jem's wife. He'd never have been proud of her, as he is of you, my dear."

"I hardly think that he is very proud of me," was the only answer she could think of.

But the old man chuckled. "That's all you know, my dear. Jem was always quiet, but you should hear him talking away to me about you. If when he was a boy he had only learned to talk to me frankly, as he does now, things might have been different!" and Sir James sighed.

Frankness! How much frankness could there be in his talk of her to the father against whom her very presence was a conspiracy? As much frankness as there was in his talk to her, she supposed, and her shame at their duplicity burned deeper.

How relieved she was when her father-in-law asked her to read him the paper, a habit which had become almost daily with them.

It was that afternoon about tea-time that the new cousin made his appearance. Mathilde's first impression was one of surprise at his unlikeness to her husband. Of slight build and undersized, dark, too, he was not at all her idea of what one of the family would look like, although on the pale, clean-shaven face she could trace characteristics that showed that he and James Stewart were cousins.

Flora's introduction was stiff and formal to a degree, but Norman Stewart put an unexpected warmth into his greeting. "Next to seeing dear old Jem himself," he said, as he held her hand, "is meeting his wife and seeing how lucky he has been." And a glance helped to point the compliment. "Old travelers learn to take glowing accounts with caution, but I can say, with the Queen of Sheba, 'the half of it has not been told me.'"

Mathilde could not but laugh and flush a bit as she withdrew her hand.

"Please, don't make me shy," she said. "My husband should have been here to welcome you. He told me that he would be sure to be back before you came. Ah! here he is," she broke off, as Stewart appeared in the doorway, muddy and dilapidated. The mutual greeting was quiet.

"Hullo, Norman; got here first?" and "Glad to see you back, Jem."

Mathilde, watching the long handshake, wondered how much sincerity it conveyed. Someone else, too, was watching it keenly, for she caught Miss Fearon's strained gaze, fixed on the two, in a nervous fashion.

Then came tea and the business of handing the cups, and at least a surface air of cheeriness to those who had come in from the outside cold and darkness to the fireside comfort.

That evening, and nearly every other after it, the dinner party consisted of three couples, apparently quite content with each other, for the parson was invited nearly every night for the obvious reason of making up an even number. The local resources at Orkwell were not large, and the family mourning still further curtailed them.

It had been to Mathilde's mingled disappointment and relief that Stewart had made no attempt at a few quiet words before dinner, and she went down by herself with a sullen resentment burning at her heart.

In her present humor the newcomer's talk was a welcome distraction, and it was a relief to make such answers to the semi-patronizing queries as to the voyage and such, with which he began the conversation.

"And so you spent Christmas Day at sea? How very strong-minded and sensible in you!" Norman said. It was beginning to dawn upon him that Mathilde was not a lady whom it was wise at patronize.

"I'm not at all sure," she returned, "that we were either strong-minded or sensible. Even at sea one doesn't seem to escape the contagious sentiment of the day. Solitary confinement would be the only way to avoid doing or saying something that one would afterwards regret."

"I should think that on board ship the opportunities of getting into mischief were limited," he suggested.

His large experience of charming married ladies made him quick to see that her words were meant for her husband's ear, and he was beginning to enjoy the play.

"Oh, no; they are only concentrated."

Stewart looked steadily across at her. "Are you going to confess to having gambled away a private hoard at poker?" he asked.

She looked back at him as steadily. "You must agree that I had not much luck in my ventures."

"I'm not so sure of that," he answered carelessly; and the words seemed to her such a taunt on the material benefits that she had taken from him, that a deep, painful flush burned her face.

Norman, feeling the atmosphere too electric, interposed. "One should never spend Christmas in England. Paris or Nice are the only civilized places."

"Yes, Paris isn't bad," she answered absently, her thoughts going back to a red sunset on Christmas Eve over the Luxembourg gardens.

"You know Paris?" he asked in surprise. "I thought—"

"You thought that I had never been out of the backwoods," she laughed. She had recovered her self-control, and was walking warily now. "What should you say if you knew that I have been an art student in Paris?"

She had now, without any doubt, attracted the attention of the whole table; but with a quick glance towards Stewart, she knew that he approved of the way in which she was playing her cards.

While the others listened, Norman answered. "With all due deference to your veracity, I should say that I have seen art students in Paris, and that I cannot imagine you among their ranks."

"The poor students!" she laughed. "But perhaps I had not time to acquire the griminess of the type."

"You certainly had not," he agreed, with conviction. "May I ask how long your studies lasted?" and he looked at her keenly.

"I worked there one winter," she answered, and again she saw in her husband's face that she had answered right.

"An art student!" Norman scoffed. "You had finishing lessons for a winter. Was not that it?"

"The same thing with a different name," she agreed; and then Nellie broke in:

"How naughty in you never to tell us that you were an artist! I am sure that you must have lovely pictures of the prairies put away somewhere—not confess, hasn't she, Jem?"

"Not that I know of," he answered, readily. "Mosquitoes in summer and blizzards in winter are scarcely conducive to picture-making."

"What a dreadful country it must be! Are you glad to get away from it?" Nellie lisped.

"This is certainly an improvement on it," she answered; and to avoid hearing more, Mathilde turned again to Norman. She was beginning to feel friendly towards this man, who looked at her so appreciatingly and led up so well to her conversational effects, and she was quite content to settle down to play bezique with him after dinner, although she saw that Nellie was doing her best to draw him away to the piano.

Stewart had been called out of the room, and Miss Fearon had her choice between solitude and the ecclesiastical couple. The game was amusing and long, and their good-nights were gay and friendly. When the end of the following day had come Mathilde laughed to herself as she bethought how much of it had been spent in Norman Stewart's company. The greater part of the morning had been passed in the library over a fine collection of miniatures, which she found, with great professions of surprise that she had not yet seen. These he made more interesting with scraps of family history, intermingled with a collector's bits of out-of-the-way knowledge.

"When you come over to Paris you shall see my own poor little collection. Nothing to equal this, but still I have one or two good things. There is a head of Madame de Recamier on a snuff-box lid," he added tenderly.

While they were thus occupied, both Jem and Miss Fearon made separate allies into the room, but each retired on finding that their attention was not to be diverted. In the afternoon there was a long walk through the beech-woods, and although Nellie was with them, her part was distinctly that of a third person.

But Mathilde was not to get through this day without an interview with her husband. She was skilfully intercepted in a twilight visit to Sir James, and followed from the room by him. How madly her heart thumped as she walked along the dusky passage at his side!

There was a seat running round the recess of a window through which could be seen a young moon in the pale western sky, against which the tree branches drew a dark tracery.

"Do you mind stopping here a moment?" Stewart said, motioning towards the seat.

"Why? It is so cold and dismal here." And she shivered.

"I should be glad of a few minutes of your society, and I should not have thought that you would find it cold in your furs. But as you prefer, I can come to your sitting-room if you have no dress to try on."

"Oh, I suppose that it is not too cold." And she stopped.

As there was no escape, she chose the place from which it was possible to beat a retreat.

So she stood looking down on the wan winter night, and Stewart stood looking down at her for so long in silence that from sheer nervousness she was driven to speak first, and to ask:

"Well, what is it?"

"I merely thought it as well to ascertain if my fellow-conspirator had any report to make. It is some time since I have been honored by one."

If her tone were impatient, his was incisive to haughtiness. The echo of it seemed to linger in hers as she answered:

"There is none that I know of. As you have heard, I have been as frank as possible with your cousin."

"Yes, that was right enough," he agreed; then suddenly, "Do you think that you are playing an altogether wise game?"

She was startled into looking up, and read only sternness in his face.

"In what way?" she demanded.

"In allowing Norman to monopolize so much of your society." Then, as he saw a quick retort coming, "Far be it from me to dream of interfering with your new friendship, only are you quite sure of the object on his part of so much intimate conversation?"

"Is it impossible that the object may be good-will and kindliness?" she flashed out.

"Not at all," he replied, "or even admiration."

"And if it were admiration, what should it matter to you, so long as I do not fail to carry out my bargain?"

The taunt had broken down his enforced self-control.

"By Heaven, it is a bargain that I have had about enough of," he said hoarsely; and the words seemed to strike her as a blow.

The voices of two approaching servants broke the spell, and, turning, she hurried away, never pausing until she had gained the shelter of her own room.

If Mathilde had not appeared to flirt with Norman Stewart before that evening, she certainly did so then.

DEATH BY ELECTRICITY.

As a Painless Method of Execution Not Yet Beyond Criticism.

You have had recently, in the United States, many discussions as to the humaneness of electrocution, the result being to show that your system of dealing out death for criminal offenses is not beyond criticism, says Francis Marre, French scientist, in the New York World. When you first invented this method of doing your criminals to death you began by experimenting on calves and oxen. These animals quickly succumbed to the shocks given them. As a consequence you thought that in the case of a man results would be the same. You have found out that conditions are not at all the same.

When a man is killed by accident—that is to say, when he is stricken down before he has had time to think of the catastrophe and prepare his mind for it—he drops like the unthinking bullock to which a shock has been administered. When the condemned man is led out to execution, however, his relative strength, or vibratory energy, both mental and bodily, undergoes a great change toward the death-dealing current. Whether he wishes it or not, his instinct of self-preservation makes him assert himself and in reality he measures his own strength against that of the current, which has been prepared to deal with him as if he were in a normal condition. As a matter of fact, the nervous strength which he naturally exerts is proportionate to the consciousness that the supreme moment of his life has come. At this moment the mental terror of the victim exceeds all other feeling, and almost wholly deadens the physical sense.

In many a case in which persons have survived lightning strokes no especially painful sensation has been recorded. In cases, however, where experimenting surgeons have submitted themselves to electrical shocks in order to test the efficacy of electrocution to within reasonable limits, the patient on issuing from the sleep or stupor brought on by the voltage has confessed that during the experiment he was conscious of a total paralysis of the bodily and mental functions long before his consciousness disappeared. He could see that he was disappearing from the world. Naturally, nothing beyond this could be attempted without endangering the patient's life.

The question, then, whether electrocution is a torment or a painless death remains open. As such it cannot be said to have justified itself, and, in the interests of humaneness, a more certain method of killing criminals should be devised.

Mrs. Wabash—Yes. Burke was her maiden name and Martin was her husband's name.

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN

Lullaby, 1909.

Go to sleep, baby, your mother has scooted,
Away to her club and has left you to me.
The slavey is out on her bike, and I'm rooted
To nursery worries till bedtime from tea.
Shut your eyes, drat you, and stop your mad howling;
There's supper to get and the beds all to make.
Scott! you're a nuisance; your ma will be scowling
To find I've not beaten the eggs for the cake.

Oh! for a rest from your yelling, which hinders
My knife-cleaning task and stove polishing ricks.
For goodness sake stop; I've to sift all the cinders,
To sew on some buttons, and scrub the yard bricks.
Hush-a-by, baby, and give your poor dadda
A chance to get on with his house-cleaning drill.
There, does my petkins feel badder and badder?
Go to sleep, bless him—confound you, lie still!

Stunning White Suit.

White crepe de chine was used for the skirt of this costume and all-over Irish lace for the jumper bodice, which is worn over a guimpe of tucked white silk mousseline. The latter material is used also for the plaiting around top and down front of jumper. The buttons down each side are crochet. A delicate touch of color is given by pink satin bands around bottom of short lace sleeves and in front, where they cross at waist line. The high girdle is of apple green satin.

When to Cut Flowers.

The best time to cut flowers, says a writer in Gardening Illustrated, is early in the morning while the dew is upon them, or else during the evening. I prefer the early morning. As soon as cut the stems should be placed in water, even if in a temporary way, if not convenient to arrange them at once in their proper positions. When the flowers have to be packed early in the morning to be sent a long distance, they must either be cut extra early, or, what is better, cut the previous evening and place in water all night in a cool place, which can be kept close. In this way they absorb all the water it is possible for them to do, being consequently fresher when unpacked. Maiden-hair fern has the name for not keeping any too fresh after it is cut; this is partly, if not greatly, the fault of the management. When it is known that a certain amount will be required in the morning it is much better to pick the fronds overnight and bunch them afterward, leaving them immersed until the following morning.

Making Starch.

If you use a spoon to blend flour and water starch, the starch is liable to be lumpy. A fork, however, separates the flour and lumps do not occur. Clothes are less liable to scorch if a little salt is added to flour starch, but it makes garments limp on wet days. If there is not white wax convenient, add a teaspoonful of kerosene to a gallon of starch. Add a little blueing also and boil the starch until it bubbles. Starch is not done when it merely simmers, and all articles treated with starch that has not been properly heated will be difficult to iron.

Covers for Medicine Tumblers.

If you have not regular medicine glasses with glass lids, the best covers for them are round circles of stiff pasteboard. They are cheap, easily prepared, noiseless and can be thrown out when even slightly soiled. Should there be several glasses of medicine to take in succession, have in the center of one disc a single red star, in the second two stars and on the third three. The proper rotation is thus easily followed by changing after each dose. When a spoon is used to mark the glass it may fall off.

Old Lace.

You should never clean old laces with gasoline, and for a very good reason. Read on and see whether you will not always remember this, because it is so much more commonsensible than most recipes. The gasoline, which is the far-famed and proverbial grease-remover, will take the natural oil out of the lace threads, which, it must be remembered, are a vegetable product, rendering them crisp, stiff and liable to snap.

Lace should first be soaked in cold water, then shaken in a bottle in lukewarm water, to which has been added the merest pinch of borax. This should be thoroughly rinsed out, to prevent its rotting the delicate fabric. When lace is very handsome it should first be basted to old linen to keep it from stretching, and it should be speedily taken out of the hottest rays of the sun when thoroughly dry. There is no necessity for scorching it indefinitely.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Separate long coats of linen—each with its inevitable touch of black—are much worn.

Newest lingerie frocks from Paris show less lace and hand work and more little ruffles and puffs.

Batiste, for the first time in the history of the fabric, is making up coats to be worn with silks and voiles.

Some of the smartest of the very late millinery inspirations are straws in a cinnamon shade, trimmed with black.

A handkerchief with a tiny colored edge is again given a conspicuous position in the patch pocket which has returned to the left side of girls' coats.

For the useful tailor-made the girls are having either the white linen waists embroidered lightly in the color of the material or of white madras striped with the color.

A silvery green foulard, trimmed with deep green velvet, woven in at the flounce, with a bow at the back and a small piece of velvet at the edge of the yoke, is a graceful arrangement.

Ochre-tinted tulle is largely used this season for yoke and sleeve arrangement with gold trimmings. The material must match the frock on which it appears, or else be a good contrast.

The newest model in the princess gown is that showing a panel that starts from the armhole seam in the shoulder. This tapers to the waist, but not sharply, and extends in a straight line to the helm of the gown.

Linen gowns are almost universally made with princess panels, held in place by large covered buttons. The collars of these gowns are either of lace, very high and without a ruche at the top, or else the neck is cut in the Dutch manner.

Woman Heads Chicago Schools.

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, who has been appointed superintendent of the Chicago public schools, takes her place among the highest salaried women in the United States. Those of her sex who have gone beyond the $10,000 emolument of her new position have been few and far between. Mrs. Young is 64 years old, having been born Jan. 15, 1845, at Buffalo, N. Y. Her parents went to Chicago when she was a child and she obtained all of her education there. She was married in Chicago in 1868 to William Young, who died some years ago, but continued her work of teaching, which she had begun in the Chicago schools in 1862, when she was 17 years old. She has been one of the popular educators in the public schools of Chicago.

MRS. ELLA F. YOUNG

She was made district superintendent of schools in 1887, and continued as such until 1899. Then she was made professor of education of the University of Chicago, which position she held until she was chosen head of the Chicago Normal school in September, 1905. Mrs. Young is the author of several books on pedagogical subjects and in addition to her work in the school Mrs. Young is an active member of the National Educational Association.

House Odors.

A smelling house is a sign of such poor housekeeping that every woman dreads it instinctively, yet many do not know the best way to overcome the trouble. If one can control the building of her house the danger of its ill-smelling can be largely overcome in the architectural arrangements. The doors into the kitchen should be so hung that there are no wide cracks and they cannot stand ajar. If possible the kitchen door should not be in line with the front of the house so that the smell of the cooking is less apt to carry through.

When Girls Should Marry.

May Sutton, the champion tennis player, has broken her engagement because she is convinced that girls should not marry till they are 25. This has led to a discussion in England on the proper marriage age of women. Lady Cadagan, who is twice a widow, is among those who agree with Miss Sutton. She says no girl knows her own mind in her teens that a man of 28 is 48 in experience, that the ideal marriage comes after disappointments and is based on sympathy and respect rather than romance.

Uses of Matting.

There are many uses for matting, and it is splendid to further the porch scheme. In the first place, the floor can be covered with a matting rug. This may take one, two or three widths, sewn together with heavy cotton thread or raffia soaked in tepid water until it is as pliable as thread. Bind the raw edges with goods and prevent it fraying. It can be stitched by hand in a large backhand stitch, which will hold it firmly. If used for shades, the matting must be hemmed with goods and tacked upon the spring rollers. Place the rollers low enough to make room for the rolled matting when the shades are drawn up. Old screens that have long done duty can be scraped and cleaned, given a coat of house varnish and covered with matting. Cushions and porch mats are serviceable made of matting. Like all other articles of like kind, the edges must be firmly bound, since matting has a tendency to come apart unless ends are secured.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Put hot flannels over the seat of neuralgic pain and renew frequently.

Buttermilk is good for the removal of freckles, tan and butternut stains.

A change of shoes and stockings completely will be found as soothing as anything for tired feet.

A bad bruise can be eased by applying turpentine. This is also excellent if one has run a rusty nail into the flesh.

Nothing relieves the sting of mosquito bites or the itching of hives like bathing them in a weak solution of carbolic acid and water.

If the clothes seem to have stuck to a wound do not tear them off, but soften with warm olive oil the parts that adhere, having first cut away the clothing close to the wound with sharp scissors.

For a bad sprain, put first under hot water and then under cold. Keep this up until the doctor arrives. Or bandage the wound in some of the clay preparations recommended to reduce swelling and pain.

It is said that chewing pieces of cinnamon bark gives relief to sensitive teeth and gums. For the sensitiveness brought about by acid fruits cleaning the teeth with precipitated chalk and water is satisfactory. The brush must be soft.

Stout people should limit the amount of potatoes and sugar they eat, as these articles of food favor the deposit of fat underneath the skin. Dry toast, lean meat, stewed fruit and fish are suitable foods in treating obesity, and rich, fat, sweet and greasy dishes ought to be avoided.

To breathe deeply is to stimulate the heart and the circulation. It means a full, high chest and broad shoulders. It means practical immunity from the dangers incurred by exposure. It means a good carriage and a well-poised head. And, best of all, it means perfect physical health.

Boy's Suit.

The boy's suit that is made with the knickerbockers and the long blouse in Russian style is a favorite one. It is becoming, it is comfortable, it is satisfactory from every point of view. This one can be made from wool material, from silk or velvet for occasions of extreme dress and from the washable fabrics that are used for boys' costumes. In the illustration serge is trimmed with a stitched band of the same, but woolen goods include cheviots and many mixtures; shepherd's checks are liked and much used and the suit made from velvet, velveteen or corduroy is extremely handsome.

To Lay Carpet Smoothly.

The secret of the success achieved by the professional in laying a carpet consists chiefly of the use of implements which have not heretofore been altogether available for use by the amateur. This is not so any longer, for a carpet stretcher and tackholder and carpet stretcher, which functions are combined in a single implement of such simple and inexpensive construction that it will soon take its place among the household implements which are regarded as essential. This apparatus provides a third hand, which holds a tack in the right place for driving, while the carpet is stretched on the floor. It also obviates all danger of crushing the fingers with the hammer in the effort to drive the nail.

LAYS CARPET.

Stitch Edge of Lace.

Before laundering your lace stitch all around the lace, carefully following the scallop on the machine. This will insure the wear of the lace twice as long and avoid the fraying of the edges in laundering.

A Thoughtful Girl.

Probably the most thoughtful daughter in the world lives in Atchison. Although 25 years of age, she still wears her hair down her back to keep her mother looking young.—Atchison Globe.

Herman Stanley, a veteran of the Federal Army, residing in Posey County, has applied to the War Department for a pension. In his application he says he fell from the water wagon, and, strange to say, he never touched liquor in all his life. Stanley was the driver of the water wagon in the battle of the Wilderness, and a cannon ball crashed into the wagon, knocking him off the wagon seat. He received a broken back in the fall, and claims he was permanently injured by the accident.

Mrs. Charles Fort arose from her bed at her home, in Greenfield at 2 o'clock in the morning and while asleep went to a cistern near the house, removed the covering and descended into water that reached her chin. The contact with the water awakened her and she screamed for help. Her husband, the City Marshal, and neighbors labored more than half an hour before they were able to rescue the woman from her perilous position, as the construction of the cistern is such that two persons could not pass the opening at one time and Mrs. Fort was not in a condition to help herself. By means of ropes and a ladder she was finally rescued. Mrs. Fort was dreaming that she was preparing to do the family washing.

On the farm of Lish Hiland, near Danville, a covey of quails has annexed itself to a flock of young turkeys belonging to Hiland, and they have adopted many of the habits of the turkeys. The quails follow the turkeys wherever they go and remain with them during the day. When evening comes the game birds follow the turkeys to their accustomed haunts and roost in the trees with them. This is said to be entirely foreign to the habits of the quails. Instead of spending the nights huddled together on the ground, for some reason the quails have forsaken the habits of their kind and have taken the first step toward living a domestic life. Hiland has made no attempt to tame the birds, and so far as he knows the covey joined forces with the turkeys of its own accord.

An infuriated bull owned by John L. Jones, a farmer living northeast of Columbus, gored a valuable mare and came near killing Jones. The farmer had been away on a visit and when he returned he started to drive through his pasture to see how his cattle were looking. The bull became angry and charged the vehicle. The mare driven by the farmer weighs at least 1,000 pounds, but the bull raised her clear of the ground and threw the animal against the buggy. Jones jumped out and the bull took after him. He scrambled back to the buggy and tried to quiet the plunging mare. The bull then turned his attention to the mare and tossed her from one side of the road to the other. Jones called to some men at work in a neighboring field and they came to his rescue. With pitchforks they drove the bull away until Jones could escape from the field.

How the snake got in her bonnet is a mystery.

Miss Ida Bruggerman, of Kendallville, will leave this week for Brazil, where she will become the bride of Rev. Martin J. Frosch, a young Lutheran missionary. Miss Bruggerman will be met at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, by Mr. Frosch, who will escort her to their new home, where the wedding will take place. The young lady will travel over 7,000 miles to be united in marriage to the clergyman, who wooed and won her when he was a pastor in Fort Wayne.

George W. Reichard and Walter Suman, of Portland, who for the last few months have been devoting their spare time and energy to the building of an aeroplane according to their own idea, expect to have their machine ready for a trial test within the next few weeks. The model is now nearing completion and is being assembled in a secluded spot not far from Portland, having been taken to the country recently, that the inventors might have more room in which to work out their plans without being disturbed by curious and inquisitive visitors who called at their rooms almost daily, before the machine was moved, hoping for a look at the mechanism of the machine.

Not a Drop of Alcohol

What is a "tonic"? A medicine that increases the strength or tone of the whole system. What is an "alterative"? A medicine that alters or changes unhealthy action to healthy action. Name the best "tonic and alterative"? Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. Ask your own doctor all about it. Never take a medicine doctors cannot endorse. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Without daily action of the bowels poisonous products must be absorbed. Then you have impure blood, biliousness, headache. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Pills for constipation.

The Rising Scale of Prices

(From Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Bradtreet's Mercantile Agency has recently made a statement showing the advance in the prices of a line of commodoties since 1896, and making a comparison with the average prices in 1896 and the present time, with the result that exhibits beyond question a rise in prices of nearly 50 per cent in the last thirteen years.

These articles, being largely those that are used and necessary in the daily life of our population, require today 50 per cent more money to pay for them than it did in 1896. The man who earned $1 per day in 1896 now needs $ 50 per day to supply himself or his family with the same amount of provisions or clothing as he did then.

The man who loaned in 1896 $1,000 and receives his money back now cannot buy with his returned cash but two-thirds as much as he could have bought in 1896. In 1896 there were some very strict institutions and some very profound and careful financiers who insisted upon inserting in bonds and mortgage notes the clause that when repaid the loans payment should be in gold of the same fineness and weight as the existing standard gold dollar of 1896.

They still have the right under any such contracts to the existing standard gold dollars, if the contract is not canceled, but when they now receive their money it will buy but 67 cents worth as compared with the 100 cents worth in 1896.

Mesdames Curry and Eversole

It is hard to find a remedy suited to the ills of children, yet Mrs. Curry of Trowbridge, Ill., and Mrs Eversole of Hindsboro, Ill., claim to have found it, and they are naturally anxious to let the rest of the world know. They say this remedy is Dr. Caldwell's syrup Pepsin, the great laxative, tonic and regulator. It is one of the remedies useful to children that does not contain narcotics. It will do all that is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 35-1m

How to Pass an Auto

A discussion on the street recently as to which is the proper way for the driver of a team to turn out when an automobile approaches from the rear resulted in the request to have the law in the matter published again. So here it is: In the "Acts of 1909," under the head of "Highway Rules" on page 328, the language is found: "Provided, That the driver of any horse, horses or other draft animals shall, upon the approach of any motor vehicle traveling in the opposite direction, drive to the right so as to give said motor vehicle one-half of the traveled portion of the highway or street, and upon the approach of any such motor cycle traveling in the same direction, the said driver of any such animal or animals shall upon the signal of bell or horn from any such motor cycle, drive to the right with reasonable promptitude so as to give to said motor vehicle one-half of the traveled portion of the said highway or street."

It is easy to remember if you are driving a horse, no matter whether you meet an automobile, or whether it is going the same way you are—turn to the right.

How Disease Starts

It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 35-1m Congressman Cyrus Cline will be the candidate next year of the democrats to again represent the Twelfth district in the national house of representatives, and will be elected. He has already made a record as a first-termer that makes him even the more popular with the "home folks," which is what every legislator should keep in mind. Mr. Cline was a democrat all the way through and never wavered in the tariff fight. He made speeches on the tariff and on the income tax that were full of logic and effective. His activity in the interests of the farmers is seen in the announcement that experts will tour the district to give lectures in October. It is said Clarence C. Gilhams would like to oppose Mr. Cline again next year and the name of Judge Heaton, of Fort Wayne, has been advanced as a strong republican. However, the people of the country are going to show their impatience and disgust with republican bulldozing and are going to elect a democratic house, to contain, among others, Hon. Cyrus Cline, of Angola.—Courier.

Take care of your stomach. Let Kodol digest all the food you eat, for that is what Kodol does. Every tablespoonful of Kodol digests 2¼ pounds of food. Try it today. It is guaranteed to relieve you or your money back. Sold by Geo. W. Geddes. 35-1m

ASK AN APPROPRIATION

For $1,000 From the County Council For Building and Plans Inspection Trips

(From Monday's Courier)

The first step looking to the building of a new court house for DeKalb county was taken Monday morning when the county commissioners made a requisition asking the county council to appropriate $1,000 for the purpose of paying the expense of the commissioners in viewing court houses in other cities and formulating plans and specifications for the new edifice in this city.

This action of the commissioners followed a conference held by several prominent taxpayers of the county, among them being Will Schaab, M. Boland, Charles W. Brown, Frank Eckhart, John Leasure and J. W. Baxter, at a meeting held in the commissioners' room, Mr. Brown making the formal request and presenting, in his talk, the urgent need of a new court house building.

Auditor Emery A. Shook was also present, and, by request, gave a statement of the county's present financial condition. It showed that there was now on hand in the county treasury a balance of $58,899 70, or rather that there was such a balance on July 1, of this year. In brief his statement was as follows:

"The county tax levy on each $100 worth of taxable property for the several years from 1904, have been as follows: For 1904, 30 65 cents; for 1905, 60 65 cents; for 1906, 30.65; for 1907, 47 65; for 1908, 44 65.

"From the above levies there was in the county treasury, in the county fund alone, on July 1, 1909, a balance of $58,879 70.

"With the present needs of the county, including the payments on the county asylum building, it is certain that the present balance will steadily increase.

"If the expense of the county for the coming year is no greater than it has been for the last several years and the levy is kept where it is now, 44 65, there will probably be in the treasury in the county fund on July 1, 1910, a balance of $80,000 or $90,000.

"The estimate is over and above the provision for the county asylum building bonds, which fall due on the first day of December of each year until 1911.

"Unless active steps are taken to build a new court house the tax levy should be materially reduced."

Should a fire occur there would be but very little hope of saving the records in any of the offices. Aside from this is the fact that the present court house is a shabby and unfit building, not suited for the transaction of the county's growing business.

All these facts were urged on the commissioners and after consideration the board by vote decided to ask the county council for the appropriation mentioned above. The amount is $1,000, of which $200 is for inspecting other buildings and $800 for plans and specifications. Commissioners Elson and Dannells voted for the appropriation. Commissioner Walker was noncommittal and did not vote at all.

This requisition asking for $1,000 will be presented to the county council at its meeting next week. If it is granted and the tax levy is kept at its present figures it means that the county council favors a new court house and that one will be built.

Then the commissioners will go ahead formulating plans and at the session of the county council in 1910, that body will be asked to make an appropriation for the new building, which it is generally thought should be in the neighborhood of $250,000.

Mr. Shook and others who have given the matter close attention are confident in the opinion that if the present tax levy is maintained the new court house, costing $250,000, can be built and entirely paid for in ten years, without increasing this levy. Indeed, it can be built and paid for in this time even if the levy is made some lower.

It was the general opinion of those present that a building costing about $250,000 should be erected. Its need was urged in speeches made by Messrs. Eckhart, Schaab, Boland, Baxter, Brown and others. At present the records of the county are unsafe. The fire of one night might destroy the buildings with its books and records of the county. The loss would be irrepairable.

The Courier has heretofore spoken of the need of a new court house in this county and also mentioned many of the facts given, showing particularly how it could be built without increasing the present tax levy one cent. The sentiment in favor of building it is general, not only here in Auburn but also among the farmers. Just now seems to be the opportune time for taking steps for its construction. DeKalb county has the money to do it. Nearly $100,000 could be paid on it at once. The payments each year could be easily met. This would be the case even if the present tax levy is slightly reduced. The expense of running the county when no public improvements are to be paid for requires a tax levy of only 32 cents.

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Are You Sure Your Kidneys are Well

Many rheumatic attacks are due to uric acid in the blood. But the duty of the kidneys is to remove all uric acid from the blood. Its presence there shows the kidneys are inactive.

Don't dally with "uric acid solvents." You might go on till doomsday with them, but until you cure the kidneys you will never get well. Doan's Kidney Pills not only remove uric acid, but cure the kidneys and then all danger from uric acid is ended. Here is Butler testimony to prove it:

Henry Barnhart, retired, Butler, Ind., says: "I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago and can say that they benefited me greatly. I had sciatic rheumatism in my left limb and could not put my foot to the ground. I knew that my kidneys were out of order as the secretions were highly colored and filled with sediment. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Phillips' drug store and after using them a short time, I was so greatly relieved that I have not been bothered since. A great deal of talk is being indulged in by the citizens of DeKalb county relative to a new court house. Such talk is foolish. It is the oldest court house in the middle west and quite a curiosity.—Churubusco Truth.

Almost every town has a lot of useless unsightly buildings which does not bring the owner a single cent for his investment. A great many times these old "shacks" could be improved and rented at a good profit to the owner, rather than being a dead loss. Besides the loss to the owner they are an eyesore to the community and are detrimental to the property surrounding them. A good example of fixing up old "shacks" can be observed in Butler. For example, the Macks have bought and repaired several of these properties, converting them into modern dwellings or tenement houses, and they always rent at a fair figure. This is economy that should be practiced more extensively in every community.

"Dad," said the country youth who had just graduated from the agricultural college. "I have long cherished a desire to go on the stage and have at last decided, with your permission to—" "My boy interrupted the old man, "all the world's a stage. You hitch the mules to the big red plow and transfer the outfit to the ten-acre lot behind the barn, where you can enact the star role in the beautiful drama, entitled, 'Down on the Farm.'"

That the lot of a Methodist preacher is not always an unenviable one is shown when J. Milton Williams, now pastor of a suburban church in Crawfordsville, was made the recipient of a gift from Burgoyne Davis, a former parishioner of Pine Village, of sixty acres of fine land valued at $125 an acre. The land lies just west of that place, and is the better part of the home farm upon which Mr. Davis and his wife live. They have no near relatives and the gift is the result of a liking which Mr. Davis took to the preacher during the four years he was pastor of this charge. Williams preached short sermons and they found favor with Mr. Davis. As trustee he used his influence to retain Mr. Williams there as long as possible and when the minister was finally transferred announced his intention of providing a fund for the education of the four small children of the preacher. Mr. Davis is getting quite old and finally decided to wait no longer.

Church of Christ Items

The yearly meeting of the eleven Churches of Christ of DeKalb county held at Garrett last Lord's day was well attended by a representative audience from the churches of the county. The addresses of the day were delivered by Rev. Jos. Scholes, of Newark, Ohio. The speaker selected the story of the Resurrection as the basis of his themes. Both addresses were masterpieces of thought and logic and were delivered in a scholarly manner. The meeting next year will be held with the church at St. Joe.

Lord's day will be observed as an niversary day. Every member of the church and congregation is requested to be present to answer at roll call. Special sermon themes: Morning service—"Enlargement." Evening service—"The Greatness of Service." Appropriate music by the choir.

The Norris & Rowe Circus

One of the most attractive features with a circus is the really remarkable equine intelligence exhibited at the Montpelier, Ohio, fair Sept. 10. Everyone is interested in horses, and is attracted by their many accomplishments when properly trained. Of course, it takes infinite patience, gentleness, and kindness, but the results obtained are more than satisfactory. With the Greater Norris & Rowe circus this season are a number of intensely interesting features. The grand entry is composed of thirty-two lady and gentlemen riders, guily caparisoned, mounting and dismounting while going at high speed on thorough-bred racing stock; this array of equestrians perform such dashing, daring feats as to hold the audience breathless until the tumultuous applause shakes the arena. The well educated horses drop flat on all fours; then come to their haunches erect on their fore-feet facing the audience; then at the word of command, the horses spring erect, the riders deftly jumping upon their backs and again dash around the ring into marches and counter marches in bewildering evolutions. The accomplished horsemen and horse-women with the Norris & Rowe shows this season include such well known names as Geo. Holland, principal somersault bare-back rider; charming Edna Maretta and clever Edw. Hocum also turn somersaults upon the bare backs of swiftly running thoroughbreds.

Obituary

Miss Samantha Brown, daughter of Joseph and Nancy Brown, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in 1842. When a small girl she came with her parents to DeKalb county, where they settled on a farm two miles east of Butler, Indiana, when she moved to Butler, occupying a house on Canal street. She was a faithful daughter in the home and when able, cared for her father and mother in their declining years.

When a young girl she united with the United Brethren church at Big Run, and was always faithful at church until sickness disabled her, and she was a respected member of that society when called home.

She had been a great sufferer for over twenty-five years, enduring the pain with a remarkable degree of patience, until death relieved her Wednesday evening, August 25, 1909, at the home of her brother, J. C. Brown, corner of Canal and Green streets, aged 66 years and 9 months.

She leaves to mourn two brothers, John and Jerome C., of this city, and a large circle of relatives and neighbors.

The funeral was held at the home of J. C. Brown Friday afternoon, conducted by Rev. O. B. Wells, assisted by Rev. W. F. Parker. Interment in the Big Run cemetery, two miles east of Butler.

Eberly Reunion

The tenth annual reunion of the Eberly family was held at the beautiful country home of Geo. Riser, two and one-half miles northeast of Butler, Ind., August 26, 1909.

The day was ideal, the beautifully shaded lawn furnished a resting place for more than 100 guests, who exchanged greetings until the noon hour.

The tables, fifty foot in length, all but groaned under the many good things prepared in the best of style and the quantity was above mention. It was a scene to be remembered. How the chicken did disappear, and only one lone preacher present.

After the dinner a well prepared program was carried out to the delight of all present. Mr. Diehl showed himself an efficient and tactful president.

There were a number in attendance from Michigan and Ohio, as well as from the surrounding country and cities of Indiana.

As the evening shadows began to lengthen they bid adieu to one and all, each expressing the hope that they should meet on the corresponding date one year hence in Tuscarawas county, Ohio.

Killed at St. Joe

Monroe Swihart, a deaf mute, was instantly killed by a B. & O. freight at St. Joe Monday. Mr. Swihart and wife were accompanying two of their nephews to the station that they might catch the 10:54 eastbound passenger train. They had left their horses standing on the north side of the tracks, and as the freight train approached they became frightened. Mr. Swihart noticed this, but being a deaf mute, did not hear nor did he see the approaching train, and he hurried across the tracks directly in front of the approaching train.

The unfortunate man was struck and hurled about fifteen feet, being instantly killed. His skull was crushed, an arm and a leg also being broken. The body was taken to the Kinsley undertaking rooms in St. Joe, where the remains were prepared before being taken to his home.

There was a large crowd of people at the depot waiting for the passenger train who witnessed the sad affair, among whom were his wife and two newhews.

Mr. Swinehart was about fifty-five years of age, and well thought of by all who knew him. His home was two and one-half miles southwest of this place.

Captain Reese a Winner

Captain Reese has been known as one of the crack rifle shots of the regular army for several years. He was formerly employed as bookkeeper by the Journal-Gazette at Fort Wayne, and during the Spanish war he commanded a volunteer company, and since then has been in the regular army.

Is The Automobile Driving Out The Horse?

PRESENT statistics show that the horse as a part of the entourage of the wealthy is rapidly disappearing. Referring particularly to its own city, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that as a reliable means of transportation in commercial lines he is holding his own for the moment. But the application of analysis to the statistics at hand shows that with the growth of the city in population the horse is not keeping pace with municipal increase. At present, it is true, the demand for good animals is active, and they are readily salable, but tracing them down it is found that they go to the field in which the automobile has not yet proved its entire practicability—that of hauling and delivery. Why this is so both automobile men and livery men agree. The initial cost, the expense of upkeep, and, most of all, the high rate of depreciation, aided by the woeful lack of experienced and economical drivers, are responsible. The education of drivers, the standardization of machines, the improvement of the general reliability of the heavier class of mechanically driven vehicles will bring about a different state of affairs, and when that time comes the present figures indicate that the horse will be more rapidly driven from the field, retaining his hold only on the sentimental lovers of the animal and in the localities where natural conditions do not make for the practical use of the automobile.

The automobile manufacturer and dealer naturally are optimistic from their side of the question, because of the extensive and rapidly increasing sales of machines in St. Louis. From the beginning St. Louis has been slow to take to the horseless vehicle, remaining loyal to the famed Missouri product, whether it be blooded horse or powerful mule. Going back the half decade chosen for comparative statistics, the records show but 779 machines licensed in the entire city. The growth of the machine in use since then has been steady, though slow. The following year the increase was a scant 200; the next year less than 200 more were added to the total. Then began a more rapid increase, for the following year the total jumped more than 400, to an aggregate of 1,529. For 1908 the licensed vehicles numbered 1,920, another increase of about 400, while for the first half of 1909 the increase was in excess of 400. These increases are taken from the growth in the number of licenses, and do not, of course, include the new machines represented by the disposal of old machines, that new ones may be purchased.

Reliable estimates of automobile authorities place this at about 50 per cent of the total sales represented in the new licenses, calculations are that the sales represent an aggregate of nearly $1,500,000 which has gone into the horseless vehicle to the exclusion of "old Dobbin." This makes it easy to see that the increase of 15 per cent in population, as compared with the increase of 1½ per cent in horseflesh, is interwoven with the immense total investment in automobiles. It is not strictly true that all of this money would have gone to horses had not the automobile been on the market, for, in the automobile as in more than one other luxury of the twentieth century, there has been frequent evidence of the "fool and his money."

The auto livery feature of the development of the automobile is not yet an element of fixed calculation, for the expensiveness of auto hire keeps aloof all but the wealthy and the spendthrift element, though efforts are making for an economical adjustment of this feature of the business. The cost of an automobile for a few hours' use, which means also the services of a competent chauffeur, is still such as to withdraw this method of pleasure taking from the very sharp competition with the liveryman, whose horses require no newly-developed expert to urge them over the city streets and country roads.

The liveryman of to-day, reduced though his numbers may be, as shown by statistics, is satisfied with his volume of business and confident that in his time at least he will suffer but little from the inroads of the automobile. There will always be a satisfaction in holding the lines over a good horse which no amount of rapid traveling in a whizzing machine will satisfy. There is the feeling of companionship which a good horse gives, and which will be forever lacking in an automobile.

MOONSHINERS ARE ACTIVE.

"Dry Law" in South Revives Business—Big Risks, but Big Money.

Ability to convert $16 worth of raw material into $120 worth of liquor is making a powerful appeal to the moonshiner in the South and a great revival is being witnessed in this lawless industry. According to Knox Booth, one of the most widely known internal revenue officers in the Southern States, the illicit manufacture of liquors in Alabama has increased fully 50 per cent since the prohibition law went into effect, and a like condition is said to obtain in Georgia, Tennessee and other states where the legitimate sale of intoxicants is prohibited by law.

Under the old conditions, with saloons running on all sides and many grocery stores in the rural sections handling liquors, there was comparatively little profit in the manufacture of "moonshine" whisky. At that time the stuff was sold as low as $1 and $1.50 per gallon. This price was not sufficient to encourage the industry in the face of vigorous work on the part of Uncle Sam's revenue scouts, and the moonshiners became few and far between.

Now, however, the rewards of successfully evading the law are much greater and the old-timers are taking bigger risks than they did under former conditions. Mr. Booth quotes one man as saying that six bushels of meal and 200 pounds of sugar gave him thirty gallons of whisky, which he could readily sell at $4 per gallon. A small still can turn out thirty gallons per day easily, affording the enterprising shiner a profit of $100 for the day's work—and the day's risk.

The bait held out to the moonshiner is more tempting than at any time since the war and it looks as if the internal revenue agents will have to do the work of almost a generation over again. In the old days when the moonshiner flourished all over the South, it was a desperate conflict that waged between the revenue agents and the moonshiners, and many an unmarked grave bears witness to the terrors of the struggle. But the revenue agents, backed by a powerful government, finally won.

In those days, when the mist and mystery of the mountains filled the timid with terror, the moonshiner fought for a principle as well as for the profit found in the perilous business. He cherished the conviction that when he raised grain and fruits upon his little farm he had an inherent right to convert them into any product he saw fit and he looked upon the revenue officer as one who sought not only to rob him of a livelihood but to take from him a right, a liberty, that was as dear to him as life itself.

It was this spirit that made every path leading to an illicit still one fraught with deadly peril to any stranger; it was this spirit that led to many a deadly battle in the mountains of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, as well as in other states where the moonshiner made his home.

The moonshiner gradually learned that there was "somewhere in the distance" a government that had to be supported and that the tax upon whisky had behind it something more than a desire to intrude upon the liberties of mankind. He also learned that this government maintained an alarming number of penitentiaries and had an inexhaustible supply of men who were apparently ready and willing to kill or be killed in the effort to fill these institutions with moonshiners. Then, too, saloons became more and more numerous, and there wasn't the profit in the business that characterized it in the good old days. So the moonshiner in a large measure passed on to other and less perilous callings.

The moonshiner of to-day does not cherish any delusions about individual liberty. He is not in the business to vindicate a principle. He simply sees in the thing a chance to turn a goodly sum at the risk of temporarily losing his liberty, and he is willing to assume this risk for the money there is in it. As a rule he does not go armed to kill, as did his forefathers, and he relies upon his heels rather than upon the accuracy of his fire when the revenue men put in their appearance.

Many raids have recently been conducted and a dozen stills have been seized. It was from one of the moonshiners arrested that it was learned how great is the profit, at present prices for meal and sugar, in the business.

CHINA AND JAPAN ARE WILLING TO NEGOTIATE

Disputed Points Over Railway to Be Settled on Lines of Recent Agreement.

MANY LINES ARE BUILDING.

Era of Development Opens in Both Northern and Southern Parts of the Empire.

The Chinese government, in a formal communication to Japan, has agreed to negotiate at Mukden the various points in the Antung-Mukden Railroad controversy not yet settled. The position taken by Japan in this matter is accepted in principle by China. Baron Ijuin, the Japanese Minister to China, is of the opinion that the trouble is at an end, so far as the legation is concerned.

Further particulars of China's awakening to the importance of railway building, as shown in the memorial to the Throne presented by the Ministry of Posts and Communications, made public in Washington, are given in reports from United States consular officers just received by the State Department.

"The real, practical development in China to-day is in the building and extension of the railways," reports James C. McNally, Consul at Nankin. "Besides those already surveyed for construction, numerous other railway lines are contemplated throughout the Empire, connecting the interior with the ports or with other lines."

Work on the Imperial Tientsin-Pukow Railway (southern section) is progressing favorably, about 10,000 coolies being employed. On this construction five American engineers are employed. Two American engineers are employed. Two American locomotives and quantities of railway supplies have been ordered from the United States. A thriving passenger business is done by the Nankin City Railway, which is of standard gauge, connecting the Shanghai-Nankin Railway and the port of Hsai Kuan. This road is to be extended to Wuhu, a distance of sixty miles. This extension will tap the second greatest rice district of China. The Shankhai-Nankin Railway is a first-class line.

Regarding railway extensions proposed or in progress in Northern China, Consul General Williams, of Tientsin, declares that the Board of Communications has announced that Chinese merchants have subscribed the capital needed for the extension of the Kai-Feng-Lo-Cang Railway, 134 miles further westward from Honan Fu, to Tung Kuan, which is situated in the great bend of the Yellow River, near the mouth of the Wei. The extension will be completed in three years, at an estimated cost of $6,500,000. Consul General Williams emphasizes the importance of having American manufacturers represented in China by American agents.

Civil War Stories

"Shot to Death with Musketry."

War is full of horrors; but there is nothing sadder nor more dreadful about it than the cold, stern enforcement of military law in the execution of an offending soldier.

Such scenes were not rare in our great armies; but the men never became familiar with them. On such occasions all the troops at hand were paraded at the place of execution, in order that they might be impressed with the solemn example. Nobody craved such exhibitions, and the infliction of the dreadful penalty was always regarded as a painful necessity.

Many a bad soldier who richly deserved such a fate was saved from it by the clemency of Abraham Lincoln. His great sympathetic heart could never resist the tearful but pathetic appeals made to him for condemned soldiers by their wives, mothers and children. There are men living to-day who owe their lives to the pity of the great man who became himself the victim of blind hatred to the triumphant Union.

But while the trade of war taught soldiers to be kind and charitable to each other, the martial spirit and the soldiers' regard for honor and duty led them to despise a shirk and to hate a deserter.

During the last year of my service I was several times a member of a general court-martial; and I do not hesitate to say that in more than one well-proved case of desertion I voted to inflict the death penalty. It usually happened that the necessary two-thirds vote for this purpose could not be obtained; but that a majority of a dozen officers could be brought to favor it, shows how quickly the spirit and traditions of the old army were imbibed by the volunteers.

Those of my comrades who knew of such things during their service, as well as those who did not, will be interested to read how military justice overtook one bad soldier in Louisiana. The facts were perfectly familiar to me at the time, and the official record is before me as I write, together with a description of the final awful closing scene, taken from the New Orleans Era of Dec. 29, 1863. The name of the man who thus suffered will be slightly disguised as Private Charles Turpin.

The man was a bully and a lawless fellow from the start. The idea that such characters make good soldiers was very quickly dissipated in the early battles of the war. The bruiser and rough, whose prowess with his fists is the pride of his own class, will grow white at the smell of burned powder, and will run from the battlefield, while the slim, weak boy with a soul of courage in him can be trusted every time to stand up and face the storm of destruction.

Turpin showed the white feather in the very first engagement at Bisland, western Louisiana, in April, 1863. The pounding of the artillery sent him fleeing to the rear. He was found hidden in a ditch.

In the midst of a stirring and fierce campaign, cowardly soldiers often escape punishment, because in the midst of the marching and fighting, there is not time nor opportunity for a court-martial. Should such a soldier redeem himself by good conduct before the campaign is over, he is pretty safe from punishment. Turpin's captain probably thought that it would be well to give the delinquent another chance.

The chance was not long coming. On the 31st of the next month the regiment reached the lines outside Port Hudson, where one bloody and ineffectual assault had already been delivered. We all knew what awaited us there. Brave men marched into the rifle-pits, knowing that the chances were large in any case that the soldier would never see home again. The prospect was too much for Turpin. He deserted on the way. I have seen men who were in the crowded hospitals at Baton Rouge at this time, who tell me that Turpin was skulking about the town. More than one who knew him warned him of what was in store for him, and advised him to return to the regiment. But he did not.

Port Huron fell July 9. A few days after Turpin was arrested and sent to his regiment under guard. During the balance of the summer, and in the fall to near the end of September, he was a prisoner under charges. Then he was brought before a court-martial and tried. It is a peculiarity of the administration of military justice that, after his trial, the accused is not permitted to learn his fate until a long interval has elapsed, when the order of the commanding general is published, reviewing the case. This painful interval lasted, in Turpin's case, till December 7th. Then the order of General Banks was promulgated, confirming the proceedings. The accused had been tried for misbehavior before the enemy, disobedience of orders, conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, and desertion. He was found guilty of each charge, and was sentenced "to be shot to death with musketry."

Only a few weeks since I was conversing with the Colinel of Turpin's regiment about the case.

"He was a worthless fellow," said the Colonel, "yet I hated to have him shot. I knew what his offense was, and after he had been court-martialed I anticipated what was coming. For more than two months he was nominally in confinement with the regiment; but you know that a man in that situation, with his regiment in the field moving about, has many chances to escape. I must say now that I hoped Turpin would realize the situation and put himself somewhere far out of reach."

But it was not to be. When the sentence was published he was ordered to be sent to New Orleans under guard. There he was confined in the parish prison.

The man seemed to realize very slowly the dreadful fate that was impending over him. But on the 27th of December whatever hope he may have had was extinguished. The order was then issued for the execution to take place on the next day at the Vickburg Cotton Press, in the presence of all the troops in the city not otherwise on duty.

The kind and faithful chaplain, Rev. C. B. Thomas, who attended the wretched man during his last hours, said that he appeared penitent and reasonably resigned to his fate. He expressed a wish that the reproach of his offenses and punishment might not follow his unhappy wife and child, in their far Northern home. He wished his name placed on his coffin and a prayer said over his grave. His last request was that the chaplain would write to his wife "that he believed God had forgiven him, and that he died in a reasonable hope of mercy."

The execution was conducted with all the solemn details that make such ceremonies impressive. The escort and firing party marching with reversed arms, to the wailing of the dirge by the bands; rank after rank of infantry and artillery filling the great inclosure of the cotton-press; the reading of the record and orders; the blindfolded culprit, placed upon his coffin in front of the firing platoon, just one musket being left uncharged, that each man of the detail might know that, perhaps, he was not to aid in the execution; the "Ready! Aim! Fire!" and the clearing away of the smoke showing the body of Charles Turpin on the ground, shattered to death by the bullets of his comrades.

It was harsh—but just!—James Franklin Fitts.

A Monument to the G. A. R.

At the close of the rebellion it became a question what to do with the vast army of trained veterans who surrounded Washington in the last days of the war. Visions of men on horseback, of Pretorian guards overawing the civil power, of corps commanders taking the place of governors, flitted across the public imagination. It was a problem—an insoluble problem, so far as thinking it out was concerned. Nobody could solve it but the veterans themselves, and they settled it in short order. After marching in the last review, they simply dispersed. That was all there was to it.

So far from desiring to take charge of the government, or turn it into a military despotism, the old soldiers hated the very thought of war for war's sake. The Grand Army of the Republic, which was organized some years after the close of the rebellion, through the efforts of Dr. B. F. Stephenson, had a hard time getting started, because of this fact. But the G. A. R. had a reason for being, and it gradually won its way into the hearts of the old soldiers, who began at length to appreciate the society which took up the work of preserving the memory of the heroic dead, and assisting needy living comrades.

We owe the reverential observance of Memorial Day largely to the influence and example of the G. A. R. The day, at first devoted merely to the placing of flowers on the graves of the dead, has widened into a great historical holiday, even superseding the Fourth of July in serious attention to our military annals, and to the inculcation of patriotism. The G. A. R. will leave Memorial day as its special gift to the nation, when with the death of its last surviving comrade it passes into history.

But Memorial day is only one of the many good works of the G. A. R. It has by many a campfire preserved the stories of the war. It has laid a genial emphasis on the comradeship of arms. Congress has done something that all men will approve in using public money to build a monument in Washington to the founder of the G. A. R. The Stephenson statue, recently unveiled, will serve to commemorate not only the work of the man who had a great idea and the energy to bring it to fruition, but the work of one of the finest organizations of modern times. —Minneapolis Journal.

Confederate Hospital Record.

The other day I came across an old book which was captured by Hospital Steward Whitcomb, of Massachusetts, a few days after the fall of Richmond. It has been used as a scrap-book, and its pages are covered up to Oct. 3, 1863. The first line contains an entry of two bushels of sweet potatoes at $40 per bushel, $80; the next is 20 pounds of butter at $9 per pound, $180. Oct. 12, 20 dozen eggs at $10, $200; Oct. 14, 7 door mats at $6, $42; Oct. 14, 28 gallons milk at $8, $224; Oct. 14, 6 bushels tomatoes at $30 per bushel, $180. The last entry was made July 7, 1864, viz.: 141 pounds veal and mutton at $5 per pound, $705. The accounts were settled up weekly; the last week's account, ending July 7, 1864, foots up $2,744.75. I have taken the items as they appear on the book, and figured them up at the prices the different articles are selling for to-day. It amounts to the enormous sum of $51,10; deducting this amount from the prices paid at the time of purchase from July 2 to July 7, 1864, inclusive, leaves a balance of $2,693.65, which goes to show that war is an expensive business. Our soldiers thought everything high during the rebellion, but if they had been compelled to pay a month's wages for one and one-third dozen eggs they would have thought it an extremely expensive luxury.

Weren't Going Back.

When Grant's army crossed the Rappahannock, Lee's veterans felt sure of sending it back as "tattered and torn" as ever it had been under the new general's numerous predecessors. After the crossing, the first prisoners caught by Mosby were asked many questions by curious Confederates. "What has become of your pontoon train?" said one such inquirer. "We haven't got any," answered the prisoner. "How do you expect to get over the river when you go back?" "Oh," said the Yankee, "we are not going back. Grant says that all the men he sends back can cross on a log."

TELEGRAPH POLES ARE DAMAGED BY WOODPECKERS

Considerable damage is being done to telephone, telegraph and electric light poles by members of the woodpecker family. These birds originally built their homes in dead or dying trunks or limbs of trees, but for some reason best known to themselves have come to the conclusion that the peeled pole offers better conditions for a home.

They have become so ravenous of late that their depredations are attracting considerable attention among those who are compelled to use quantities of wooden poles. Their activities spread over a wide portion of the United States, notably in the south, southwest and central west. Cedar poles seem to be the ones most frequently attacked. The birds bore into them at any height from the ground, and the holes which they make are often two or three inches in diameter and four or five inches deep. Such an amount of wood drilled from a stick of timber which is carrying a load of wires naturally weakens the strength of the line.

It would, of course, not be a difficult matter to exterminate these birds. However, this is not desirable, as they are among the most beneficial forms of bird life native to this country, because they destroy large numbers of insects which seriously damage forest and food crops. It seems, therefore, that methods should be undertaken to compel the birds to revert to their former habit of boring rather than to exterminate them.

PITCHFORK PENETRATED LUNGS.

John B. Warrick, of Hartford, N. J., may die from a pitchfork wound. Just before starting to come down from the hayloft, a farm hand threw his pitchfork to the floor below, not knowing his employer was underneath. The sharp tines of the fork struck Warrick on the breast and penetrated his lung.

If the number of people daily entering London were to be dispatched from any given station by rail, 1,977 trains, each conveying 600 persons, would be required. If all these trains were arranged in a straight line they would cover 221 miles of railway.

New York State has taken a practical way of encouraging forestry. During the past planting season more than 1,000,000 seedlings were distributed at cost throughout the State for planting.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING TO BE RAZED.

PRESENT CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING.

A new eighteen-story Board of Trade building, costing at least $3,000,000, will replace the present home of the Chicago board at La Salle street and Jackson boulevard within a few months, if nothing goes awry with the wishes and plans of the members of that body. At a meeting of the Board of Trade the members voted almost unanimously in favor of a resolution creating a committee of five to take up the building propositions. This means that plans for the new building will be pushed forward with vigor. It is said that the members of the board stand four to one in favor of razing the old structure and building a new one. The present building does not pay. The ground upon which the building stands is valued at about $2,500,000. The old Board of Trade building was erected in 1884 and there is still outstanding against the building a bond issue of $1,200,000. If a new building is erected many of the large banks will have branch offices in it and five big railroads have already asked for space. The building will be at least eighteen stories in height and will cost in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

FIFTY MILES OF STRING SAVED BY THIS WOMAN

Mrs. Amos B. Cleaver, of Reading, Pa., has been eighteen years getting together an object lesson that can't be beaten and which is like nothing else ever seen or heard of. She did it, too, for the sake of teaching children to save. Eighteen years ago Mrs. Cleaver took a tiny empty medicine bottle and began to wind around it all the odd little strings that she came across, until now, if she were to unwind her ball of string and stretch it out it would run over fifty miles of ground.

Year in and year out, day after day, and week after week, Mrs. Cleaver has kept accumulating string and winding it on to her ball. The idea pleased the children in the neighborhood, who are anxious to see the ball grow, and who bring or send every bit of string they think will be worth winding on to the rest. Indeed, strings have been sent to Mrs. Cleaver from the States of California, Missouri, Ohio, Illinois and Massachusetts. Coming through the mails, and handed to her in other ways, the ball now weighs twenty-six pounds and has a circumference of forty-nine inches.

Mrs. Cleaver wills that at her death the ball shall be sent to the Home for Friendless Children, at Reading, where it is to be used as an object lesson in saving.

At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. TRAINING GIRLS FOR SOCIETY.

Veneer Part of Polish Used in Putting Finish on Miss America.

"Finishing" schools are training schools for society, and upon that training they naturally place emphasis. The pupil is forced to shine. Not only at the institutional reception, but at meals, at play and even in the classroom she is watched by a competent critic of social behavior, and she succeeds, though she falls behind in her real studies, so long as she does not commit the crime of a failure to "make good" socially, says a writer in Hampton's Magazinee.

You observe that there may well be a broad chasm between what is taught and what is learned. One student of my acquaintance has, after a three year's course, managed to choke down enough French to translate, if there's a dictionary handy, the ordinary Gallic phrases encountered in a popular novel; she knows what a menu is trying to say, though, of course, neither she nor anybody else can translate that verbatim. If she would take time to complete it—but she never takes time to complete anything—she might be able to make a fair copy of a Charles Dana Gibson line drawing. She can recite certain chapters of the Bible by heart, but knows about as much concerning them as the average actor knows about the lines of his part. And as for literature, she has acquired the exact date of every great English author's birth and death without having any conception of what any of them wrote and without swerving one hair's breadth from her allegiance to the contemporary marshmallow school of fiction.

One mother was rapturously descanting to me upon her daughter's social advantages.

"But what," I essayed, "are her intellectual pursuits?"

Madam blinked. "Her intellectual pursuits?" she echoed. "Oh, well—she just dotes on music, and she is a really wonderful speller."

IT WORKS.

The Laborer Eats Food That Would Wreck an Office Man.

Men who are actively engaged at hard work can sometimes eat food that would wreck a man who is more closely confined.

This is illustrated in the following story:

"I was for 12 years clerk in a store working actively and drank coffee all the time without much trouble until after I entered the telegraph service.

"There I got very little exercise and drinking strong coffee, my nerves grew unsteady and my stomach got weak and I was soon a very sick man. I quit meat and tobacco and in fact I stopped eating everything which I thought might affect me except coffee, but still my condition grew worse and I was all but a wreck.

"I finally quit coffee and commenced to use Postum a few years ago and I am speaking the truth when I say, my condition commenced to improve immediately and to-day I am well and can eat anything I want without any bad effects, all due from shifting from coffee to Postum.

"I told my wife to-day I believed I could digest a brick if I had a cup of Postum to go with it.

"We make it according to directions, boiling it full 20 minutes and use good rich cream and it is certainly delicious."

Keeping the Wheat Pure.

One of the most important factors in growing improved wheat for seed is to keep the wheat pure. Many farmers are careless on this point, often planting new seed on old wheat ground, thus allowing it to become mixed with volunteer wheat the first year. This mixing of varieties causes wheat to detriorate in yield and quality. When wheat is grown for seed it should be on clean land, which is free from volunteer wheat and from other volunteer grain, rye being especially objectionable. Care must be taken in harvesting and threshing the seed wheat to keep it from becoming mixed with other varieties of wheat. Again, in order to maintain the quality and yield of wheat it is necessary to maintain the fertility of the soil and to give the land good culture.—Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

Preventing Disease.

It is more easy to prevent disease in animals than it is to cure. Hog cholera prevails more or less in all sections of the country, but in the majority of cases it is due to the condition of the herds and mismanagement in feeding than to any other cause. Hogs must have green or bulky food, also salt and charcoal. These substances are not in a direct way preventive of cholera, but they keep the animals in a more thrifty condition and render them less liable to disease.

Packing Butter for Shipment.

Packages of butter often receive rough handling while in transit. For this reason the maker should take pains in fixing the package so that it will not reach its destination broken. In his report of the last butter contest, Earle Brintnall, assistant professor of dairying at Manhattan, Kan., recommends packing the small tub in a larger one and filling the intervening space with paper, or wrapping in paper and then in a gunnysack, both of which he says are good methods.

To Destroy Woodchucks.

A Pennsylvania farmer gives this experience with woodchucks (ground hogs): He had set several hundred early cabbages, and in going through his patch early one morning he found several plants missing. He found the woodchucks' hole under the wall—in fact, several holes—near his cabbage field. He armed himself with several steel traps and used all his cunning in setting them in the burrows of the woodchucks, but after several mornings of patient waiting, capture by trap proved unsuccessful. But, having heard that they were very fond of salt, he mixed a liberal quantity of paris green in about a quart of salt and placed a handful near each burrow. He was not troubled again that season, and this has been his remedy ever since.

The Cowpea as a Fertilizer.

The cow pea is a large beanlike plant that produces a large amount of forage. It is valuable as a green food or for plowing under for green manure. It has been used successfully for improving wornout soils, especially those that are light and sandy in texture. Its greatest advantage for this purpose is its ability to gather nitrogen from the air and mineral elements from subsoil. When the crop is plowed under, these are left near the surface, where they will be available to shallow-rooted crops and those which cannot get nitrogen from the air. It has been little used for hay in the North, because it cannot be readily dried in this climate. It makes a good green feed for milch cows between August 15 and September 15, or it may be preserved in the silo by mixing with corn fodder. For green manuring, the seed should be sown broadcast in late June or early July, at the rate of one and a half bushels per acre. It is especially valuable for growing in young orchards. When wanted for fodder it should be sown in early June, in drills 2½ feet apart, at the rate of one bushel seed per acre.

Fly Repeller.

The Kansas Agricultural College has experimented with the various chemical formulas to repel flies from live stock and recommends the following as fairly satisfactory: Resin, 1½ pounds; laundry soap, two cakes; fish oil, one-half pint; enough water to make three gallons. Dissolve resin in a solution of soap and water by heating, add the fish oil and the rest of the water. Apply with a brush. If to be used as a spray, add one-half pint of kerosene. This mixture will cost 7 to 8 cents a gallon and one-half pint is considered enough for one application for a cow. At first it will be necessary to use two or three applications per week until the outer ends of the hair become coated with the resin. After that retouch those parts where the resin is rubbed off.

Ammonia as a Fertilizer.

The value of sulphate of ammonia as a fertilizer was demonstrated in some German tests where marsh lands were fertilized with nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia. With both oats and beets the plants receiving sulphate yielded much more than those receiving nitrate. These results indicate that on marsh lands a liberal supply of lime or sulphate of ammonia may be advantageously substituted for nitrate of soda and confirms the wisdom of the practice common in Germany.

A Good Gate Tightener.

This can be put on any wire gate. Nearly everybody knows how to make a wire gate as shown in the cut, so all that needs an explanation is that wire No. 3 is common wrapping wire. Put around post A and make long enough to reach post B. Run a stout stick or iron rod through wire No. 3, drawing it toward post A. In this way the gate can be made as tight as possible.

GATE TIGHTENER.

Destructive Rats.

According to a recent report of the biological survey of the Department of Agriculture, rats destroy annually $100,000,000 worth of American grain. It is estimated that one rat will eat 60 cents' worth of grain in a year, while of oatmeal it will consume $1.80 worth. Rat-proof construction, especially the use of concrete foundations, is urged, as well as some rational method of disposing of garbage and storing food.

FORMS OF HOOFS.

Fig. 2.

The form of a horse's foot determines the peculiarities of the shoe that is best adapted to it. Viewing the foot from the side the regular position is that shown in figure 4, in which the weight will be borne to best advantage. Looking from the front the regular form is that shown in figure 1, the wide toe being indicated by figure 2, and the narrow toe by figure 3. With the regular or normal shape the weight falls near the center of the hoof, and is evenly distributed over the whole bottom of the hoof. The toe points straight forward and when the horse is moving forward in a straight line the hoofs are picked up and carried forward in a line parallel to the middle line of the body. A pair of hoofs of the form shown in figure 2 allows the weight to fall largely into the inner half of the hoof. In motion the hoof is moved in a circle. Horses that are "toe-wide" are likely to interfere when in motion. In the third form (figure 3) the weight of the body is directed on the outer half of the hoof. The irregularity of form causes a paddling motion and frequently interfering.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

It Stays on the Line.

An improvement has been recently made in the construction of clothes props which all women who take an active part in the household routine will appreciate. It would seem that the old-style prop had done service so long that there could be no improvement suggested, but a well known shortcoming of the old wooden pole is that in a wind it is soon dislodged and falls over to drag back and forth over the dirty surface. The new pole is supplied with a double hook which prevents the pole from leaving its place under the rope.

CLOTHES PROP.

Kitchen Ratios.

The question of proportions of ingredients used in cooking is often puzzling. An experienced cook gives the following suggestions:

One cup of liquid to three cups of flour for bread.

One cup of liquid to two cups of flour for muffins.

One cup of liquid to one cup of flour for batters.

One teaspoonful of soda to one pint of sour milk.

One teaspoonful of soda to one cup of molasses.

Cherry Pie.

Line a deep plate with paste and rim and wet the edge. Mix one tablespoon of flour with half a cupful of sugar and sprinkle it over the crust, dotting it with one teaspoonful of butter. Fill the plate with cherries that have been washed and stoned. If the cherries are sour more sugar will be required. Cut a slit in the upper crust, lay it over the fruit and press the edges firmly together. Bake about half an hour and serve as soon as cooled.

Peach Jam.

Wash and wipe the fruit, take out the stones and put the peaches through the chopper, skins and all. Measure and add three-quarters as much sugar as you have peach pulp, and the kernels—all of them. A few minutes' boil will bring the jam to the requisite consistency, since there is no water to boil away. Have no fear of the skins. They cook up and can not be found.

Ox-Tail Soup.

Cut a small ox tail into pieces and fry in butter. Moisten with a quart of consomme and a dash of mushroom catsup. Cook for one hour, season with pepper, add a little well-mashed barley, a little Worcestershire sauce and a bouquet of herbs. Boil thoroughly for forty-five minutes, skim and serve. Lemon and hard-boiled egg slices may be added if desired.

Peppermints.

Take two and one-half cups sugar, one-half cup water. Boil five minutes, turn into a bowl, add one tablespoon confectioner's sugar and one-fourth teaspoonful peppermint or checkerberry extract. Stir until nearly stiff and drop quickly on buttered paper.

Vermont Rusks.

One and one-half cups sweet milk, half cup sugar, half cup butter, two eggs, two-thirds yeast cake. Make a thing batter and let rise until light; add flour to mold and let rise again. Mold and make into biscuit and let rise two hours. These are fine.

Corn Cake.

Three-quarters cup corn meal, one and one-quarter cups flour, two heaping teaspoons baking powder, one-quarter cup sugar, one tablespoon melted lard, one egg, one cup milk, one-quarter teaspoon salt. Bake 20 minutes.

Fried Green Tomatoes.

Slice the green tomatoes, sprinkle with a few drops of olive oil, dip in crumbs to which salt has been added. Saute in butter till tender.

Short Suggestions.

Dish mops can be kept odorless only by putting them in a solution of soda water.

Do not attempt to use sour or moldy flour. Dry it out in the oven and save it for starch.

After scraping fish rub the steel knife over an old lemon peel and it will destroy all fish odor.

The white of one egg "cut" with white vinegar makes an excellent leather furniture polish.

Do not give the bird any fruit that is likely to attract bees to the cage, or you may lose a valuable pet.

Soutache braid makes good laces for the baby's bootees and it is also useful for lacing corsets and the chemise.

The curved butter knives for cutting little round pats of butter are more satisfactory if the knife is dipped into cold water or buttermilk before cutting the butter.

Kitchen faucets are quickly cleaned with any acid, such as lemon, salts of tartar, etc. Ammonia and washing powder are excellent cleaners.

Tablecloths generally begin to wear first where the folds come. To change the position of the folds is, therefore, to prolong the life of the cloth. It is easily done by taking a few inches off one side and one end of the cloth, and hemming it again.

Domestic.

President Edward O'Neil, of the Master Butchers' Association of New York, was discussing the advance in meat prices due to the wheat corner.

"And these wheat cornerers," said Mr. O'Neil, "call themselves patriots, eh? They're in the Washington and Lincoln class. They only cornered the wheat to prevent Europe from taking it away from us and leaving us to starve. Patriots!"

He laughed harshly.

"It reminds me," he said, "of John Stockton, who was renowned for his domesticity. Two women were talking about Stockton. The first said:

"'He has very domestic tastes, hasn't he?'

"'Oh, very,' the other woman replied. 'He flirts with every cook they have.'"

Sufferings from Kidney Troubles Were So Acute.

Mrs. Josephine Jeffery, 24th and Washington Sts., Marion, Ind., says: "To look back upon what I have gone through, it seems a miracle that I live, and I feel that I owe it to Doan's Kidney Pills. My case developed gradually. First, backache, floating spots before my eyes, weakness and exhaustion, then a terrible steady pain over the kidneys and an extreme nervousness. Doctors finally said there was no hope for me, but I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and gradually recovered my health."

A Thing of the Past.

Leonora O'Reilly, the vice president of the Women's Trade Union League, was praising this organization's work in New York.

"And it has a great future before it," she said. "I have no doubt that a century hence the members of the league will regard the woman of to-day as we now regard the farmer's wife of the early '40's. A Maine deacon of the early '40's was talking to the minister. He sniffed and whined:

"'Oh, yes, Job suffered some. I ain't denying htat, parson. But Job never knowed what it was to have his team run off and kill his wife right in the harvest season, with hired girls wantin' $2 and $2.50 a week.'"

A Royal Actress.

England boasts many titled ladies who once knew the glories of the stage, but Germany claims the only actress who ever became the wife of a ruling prince. She is the Baroness von Heldburg, morganatic wife of the reigning Duke George II. of Saxe-Meiningen, and the people of the Duchy have recently been showering her with affectionate congratulations on her seventieth birthday.

Baroness von Heldburg was a member of the celebrated Saxe-Meiningen Court Theater Company when Duke George II., after losing his second wife, Princess Feodora of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, fell in love with her and married her. She was a famous beauty, and was celebrated at the time for her Juliet. Her maiden name was Ellen Franz. She received the title of Baroness von Heldburg on her marriage day.

Harry Lauder's Bluff.

A pretty piece of "bluff" is attributed to Harry Lauder, the variety entertainer. During his first play in New York he was accused of stinginess. He heard that one journalist had severely commented on the manner in which he drew the purse strings. Not long afterward this man asked him for an interview. Lauder gave him an address and told him to come at 10 o'clock the following night. In the meantime the comedian rented a wretched room in the slum quarter of the city. When the caller came he was ushered into this garret. There sat Lauder, blue with cold, by the light of a single candle. "Arre ye goin' to put down what I say?" Lauder asked. The reporter assured him with pride that he never made notes during an interview. "My memory is excellent," he boasted. "Weel, then," said Lauder, "we'll aye save the light!" And he blew out the candle.

Don't Be An Imitator.

The imitator, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, ruins his capacity for originality; for initiative; he loses his creative power; his inventiveness and resourcefulness are never developed. In fact, his executive ability—the ability to originate, to do things—is seriously crippled, if not utterly destroyed by his efforts to imitate some one else.

No human being ever yet made a success trying to be somebody else, no matter how great or successful that person might be. Success cannot be successfully copied; it is original; it is self-expression. A man is a failure just in proportion as he gets away from himself.

When Henry Ward Beecher and Phillips Brooks were at the height of their fame, hundreds of young clergymen tried to copy their style, their mannerisms, their mode of expression, gestures, habits, but they fell as far short of the power of either of these giants as the common chrome falls short of the masterpiece. Not one of these imitators ever amounted to anything until he stopped copying, imitating, and began to build on his own foundations.

A great many clergymen to-day merely echo other preachers' sermons which they have read and absorbed. The majority of the books published are imitations of previous books, echoes of the authors whose style and plots the writers have copied. But these copied sermons and books lack vitality, force, naturalness. They do not stir the blood or touch the heart of the bearer or reader. They are cold, lifeless.

In Cuba the State telegraph offices have been combined with the postal department.

This $1000.00 Cup for an ear of Corn

Made by Tiffany. Nearly 3 ft. high—in solid gold and silver. Actual contract price $1,000. To be awarded at the

National Corn Exposition, Omaha December 6 to 18, 1909

to the man, woman or child producing the best ear of corn grown this year in the United States.

Open to everybody belonging to the Association—Nothing to buy or sell.

The purpose of the donor of this trophy—W. K. Kellogg—is to improve the quality of the millions of bushels of corn used in making Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes.

Many people think the perfection of corn flavor has been reached in Toasted Corn Flakes. Perhaps it has. If you don't know how good Kellogg's — the genuine Toasted Corn Flakes—is, try it. Then you'll see how hard a task we are giving ourselves to improve it, and the only way we can improve it is by the betterment of the corn itself.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 6th to 18th, 1909. Two simple rules will govern the plan, and they are—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909, and that you are a member of the National Corn Association—full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time.

The contest will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for improving the quality of corn used in making KELLOGG'S TOASTED CORN FLAKES. If you haven't tried this delicious cereal, begin your education in "good things to eat" today. All grocers have it.

Games were played after which fine refreshments were served. All returned to their home at a late hour declaring Miss Mutzfeld a royal entertainer. Mrs. Russel Young is teacher of the class.

IT TAKES COURAGE.

To speak the truth when, by a little prevarication, you can get some great advantage.

To live according to your convictions.

To be what you are and not pretend to be what you are not.

To live honestly within your means, and not dishonestly upon the means of others.

When mortified and embarrassed by humiliating disaster, to seek in the wreck or ruin the elements of future conquest.

To throw up a position wth a good salary when it is the only business you know and you have a family depending upon you, because it does not have your unqualified approval.

To refuse to knuckle and bend the knee to the wealthy, even though poor.

To refuse to make a living in a questionable vocation.

To refuse to do a thing which you think is wrong, because it is customary and done in trade.

To be talked about and yet remain silent when a word would justify you in the eyes of others, but which you cannot speak without injury to another.

To face slander and lies, and to carry yourself with cheerfulness, grace and dignity for years before the lie can be corrected.

To stand firmly erect while others are bowing and fawning for praise and power.

To remain in honest poverty while others grow rich by questionable methods.

To say "No" squarely when those around you say "Yes."

To do your duty in silence, obscurity and poverty, while others about you prosper through neglecting or violating sacred obligations.

ATCHISON GLOBE SIGHTS.

Somehow, you hate to tell a man he can't spell.

There are more kinds of shiftlessness than there are kinds of religion.

What has become of the old-fashioned woman who took a pie to a picnic?

Not one man in a hundred has sense enough to take care of money after he gets it.

It is terribly hard to pursue such a course that it pleases both an old and a young person.

As a rule, people do not think as much of their ancestors as they think of their heirlooms.

Being polite is not much of an effort until some dull person insists upon telling his jokes.

No matter how young you are, there are always those who think you are old enough to know better.

When women say they "understand" the men, they mean they can't be fooled by any of their meanness.

What your friends call your "strength of character," your enemies are likely to call "downright meanness."

Poor man! he is bored to death to buy tickets to amateur entertainments and then bored to death when he attends.

What has become of the old-fashioned man who caught the children and "bearded" them by rubbing his face over theirs?

You will often find a mother who thinks the baby loves her more than it loves its father, because it cries to go to her when it is hungry.

Confusion.

Lillian Braithwaite Hill, the noted writer of humorous advertisements, replied, at a banquet of haberdashers in St. Joseph, to an attack, by a business rival, on advertising humor.

"My friend," said Miss Hill, "says the public wants seriousness, not humor, in its 'ads.' But he contradicts himself horribly as he states his case. His facts seem to me as confused and absurd as the obituary of his wife's death that a Milwaukee man sent to a Milwaukee editor I know.

"This obituary said:

"'Mine wife Gretchen is dead. If she had lived till next Friday she'd been dead just two weeks yet. As a tree falls, so must it stand.'"

INTERESTING LETTER FROM OREGON

What Butler People Are Doing in the Far Away Clime

Grant's Pass, Ore., Aug. 13, '09.

MR. C. W. BEARD:

Dear Old Neighbor—It has been quite a long time since I have written, but I have been busy as a nailer working my head off painting, papering, taking care of chickens and ducks, but I am taking a rest. A party living here wants us to take a trip out in the mountains some thirty miles and take a hunt and fishing trip out where it's wild and woolly. The deer season is on and there are plenty and said to be fat and slick this year. If we get some one to take care of our poultry we are going. Gee, but I would like to shoot a deer and have some dried venison for the coming winter. Lots of wild ducks, grouse and quail on the mountains and river. I can fish, but not much of a hunter, but one can learn to shoot. This forenoon wife hollowed upstairs to get up and see what we had in the barn, all black too. I got out and there I see six white as snow puppies which Toodles had found through the night, three of a kind, and everyone worth a ten spot each, and she is as proud as can be of them, but I don't suppose you have the dog fever (that's all about the pups.) I forgot to mention that there are bear in the mountains. One can buy a cub from $5 to $20 from boys who catch them and bring them to town, and little fawn deer are cheap. If I ever get settled out here on a place of my own I mean to get a cub as they make a fine mischievous pet, and when they are grown and matured they make fine eating and one has the robe left. I got acquainted with a party from Arizona who lives on a timber claim out thirty-five miles, who is trying to get wife and I to take up 160 acres each of large fir and sugar pine, (read the booklet I sent you) great tall fir and pine trees five to eight feet through at the base and millions of feet on each claim. I can get two claims out thirty-five miles on a new proposed railroad as a homestead. Timber claims for $16.50 and an extra cost of $150 to have the party to locate us. One has to live upon this fourteen months, then you get a deed from Uncle Sam, then forget it and it's worth some good cash. Saw mills are out within five miles now, and if the railroad would go through within a year or two just see what the proposition means. There are ladies from Portland who came here a year ago, who located and have staid by it and this winter will prove upon their claim. Their husbands are business men in Portland and they come down in the warm season fish, hunt and get acquainted with their wives again and have a good time. We are thinking pretty strong of trying the stunt. One can live upon game, keep a few chickens, a horse to drive, clear off a garden spot and live like an Indian. See! For fourteen months drink pure mountain water, grow fat, saucy and ragged; it looks good to me, but it takes grit. The wife would have to live upon her claim and I mine, but one could build one's cabin close together and grow fat, and by the way Cal, what do you think of our twins, don't you think they would grow fat up in the mountains?

I don't take the Butler papers, but Mrs. Maxwell said Mr. Higley thought them borrowed. Well, just ask Mrs. Warren Mason when she gets home from their trip. Warren and wife stopped with us one night and day and we enjoyed their visit hugely. T. J. Knisely and Harding hunted us up just long enough to say hello and good by, but we were glad to see them if only for a short time. Warren met Milo Husselman at Seattle fair and said that he was looking fine, also met Dal Headley's cousin in Portland. One meets with a good many eastern people all throughout the coast. Since writing you I got cold feet and thought that I wanted to go to California. Well, I was to visit my sisters, one at Fresno, the one who was east last fall, and one at Berkley across the bay from San Francisco. I stopped off at Mt. Shasta, a high mountain in the Siskiyou mountains in northern California. It is covered with snow the year around, a great spring pours out at its base and the water is sold for medical use. It's a graft, but the doctors prescribe its use and of course it sells, thousands of gallons put up in quart bottles are shipped all over the west. Its tase is something like a rotten egg smells, so you know it's good. See! Well, I stopped off at Red Bluff, Tahama, Orland and Arbuckle in northern California, then on down to Davis nine miles west of Sacramento where the experimental farm station is located, looked that over then went to San Francisco. I lived there four years, some thirty years ago, and just think not a soul knew or recognized me. Strange, wasn't it? Well, Cal, it's wonderful what the people have done since the quake; a few old relics are left, but it's built up with tall fine concrete modern buildings, and say I missed the cussed flea which San Francisco was noted for. They sell two nicely mounted fleas in a nice little white box for a souvenir for two bits. I called on my sister, had a few small bottles with her, (they still sell beer in Frisco, the refined angels have not got that city yet—you might import some from Butler) then went north in Sanoma county, stopping at Petaluma, a chicken country, passed off as an Oregon poultry raiser and got to see some fine ranches. Everything is poultry there, I will just mention one man, a Mr. George from Australia, who keeps four thousand head of white Leghorns, was setting 41,504 egg incubators which hatch by steam. It takes three men three days to set the wooden hens, takes 20,661 eggs at a setting, and he sets or hatches twelve times per year, sells the baby chicks at $7 to $8 per hundred. Take your pencil and figure a few minutes. It made me smile to myself when I thought of my little 300 scrub hen ranch. (I raised and sold 300 since coming here. Have sold $72 worth of chicks and eggs from the brown pullets I brought from Butler. I got $2 50 per setting and sold $20 worth of young stock last Tuesday.) I am getting off my California trip. See! (I got more hen fever at Petaluma.) I went from there by electric to Sebastapool, then to Santa Rosa, happened to think of Ida Madden living at Healdsburg, a little ways north, so I went up and called on her. She was looking fine as silk and has a good husband. They were building them a new home. I then went to Napa City in Napa county, then to Fresno to visit my other sister. It was hot, 106 degrees in June. (I don't think Fresno county people will feel the change one bit when they cross over to get their harp and wings) but Cal and Minnie it would make you open your eyes to see the fine city and surrounding country set out to fruit of all kinds, oranges, grapes, lemons, peaches and pears, wine galore and good to take for the blues. Take a gill every ten minutes until you feel better. See! Beats Texas dope all hollow.

Well, I came back up to Oregon and went to work. There is plenty of work. I get $3.50 to $4.50 for eight hours work, and have been pretty busy for a Hoosier. It has cost me some money, but I am $103 ahead of the game, and (that has begun to burn my pocket) Oregon gold is hot stuff to carry long. See! I also have a bid to prospect this winter for gold, and I may strike a vein of sand or gravel. Some that know how make good wages just panning with a shovel, pick and pan, but I am rather tender footed for gold mining, but the old saying is a fool for luck, so if I find a million I will send you enough to come west and see this glorious country. Maxwell and wife took dinner with us Sunday. They are working hard. We (Walt and I) went upon the side of a mountain just out of town and got a hat full of great large ripe peaches to eat. Ripe peaches and cream, ripe plum prunes and cream three times a day isn't bad dope to take (only one has to look out for them awful pains just beneath the third vest button.) I have had the shock several times the past two weeks, but hope to overcome it by the time pears are ripe and that will be soon, for I got one nice Bartlett off a tree this afternoon.

Well, read this in sections at your leisure and write me all the news, for I get no eastern papers and I am indebted some twenty letters which I have not had the time to answer, so got no news until Warren came. We are fine and dandy. Regards to all inquiring friends. Take that trip that I wrote you about last spring and come out west, you will live longer, see more and be all the better for the trip.

Yours truly,
S. M. HUSSELMAN.

Church Reception

On last Wednesday evening members and friends of the Zion class gathered at the beautiful country home of C. M. Evertts, in honor and respect of their pastor, O. B. Wells and his wife.

The occasion was made possible by the closing of the fourth year's pastorate at this place. Over one hundred of the friends of the congregation were present and enjoyed the social evening together.

Bro. Evertts, wife and two daughters showed themselves skilled in manner of entertainment. Light refreshments, ice cream and cake were served.

At a late hour after many farewells and well wishes all returned to their homes rejoicing in the splendid associations of the past and present.

THE FACTORY FUND PASSES THE $11,000 MARK

The bonus for the stove factory thus far amounts to something over $11,000. Subscriptions are slow and hard to get. Why some of our people cannot see the benefit that would be derived by such an institution is not easily understood by the more enthusiastic element. Personally we believe it is understood, but this is like the advertising business to some extent. Some merchants are like teachers, they live on the efforts of their competitors. They let their competitors advertise and get the people to town and then they profit by it. The same may be said of the stove factory proposition. They think perhaps it will come anyhow, and they will profit just the same But if the money is raised, some of these fellows must thaw out.

We assume that every man knows his own business and we are not dictating, but merely laying the facts before the people, so if the factory is lost after getting within a few hundred dollars of the amount asked for, there is no one to blame but those who might contribute but won't.

Mr. Shively will be here again this week and we are in hopes that the matter will be closed up. A failure now would handicap us for a long time in our effort for a greater Butler. Will we let it go down for $1500 or will we raise the amount and secure the factory? This must be decided before the 15th inst.

Church of Christ Items

Quite a large delegation from our church attended the yearly meeting at Edgerton last Sunday.

The monthly business meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. was held on Tuesday evening at the church.

The sermon themes for the services on Lord's day are: Morning—"The Vision of Dry Bones." Evening—"The Church Historic." The evening sermon will be the first of a series of three sermons on the growth and development of the church.

The annual offering for missions will be taken Sept. 19. Let every member of the church have fellowship in this movement for world evangelization.

If nature teaches any one lesson better than another it is that the highest expression of life is realized when there has been a generous response to that which is conducive of growth. The flower of the field responding as it does to all the genial influences of nature is perfection itself. So with our lives when once brought to that place where they are surrendered to the highest, sacrificing for the highest and working for the highest are reaching for that state of being which Christ coveted for his followers when he said, "Be ye perfect even as your heavenly father is perfect."

A cordial invitation is extended to you to worship with us on the Lord's day.

That Volume Number

Who would have thought that after all the advice that Brother Powers, of the Butler Herald, has had that he still publishes his paper under the volume number of XL? Come, brother, don't you know that Brother Higley has advised you that that number is not right? Can't you see what an awful difference that little figure makes although there is not one in five hundred that ever sees it?—Fayette Review.

You have stated the reason, Bro. Yost, why we have paid so little attention to what Bro. Higley said, no one cares about our volume number. Parties wanting to buy space in a paper usually look up its circulation. However, we can give a little explanation now regarding our volume number. Last week a Mr. C. L. Smith, of Toledo, called at the HERALD office to do some advertising, and after a short talk with Mr. Smith we learned that he had a hand in starting a paper in Butler in 1870, and the paper was called the HERALD, and it was democratic, P. H. Bateson, of Waterloo, being the editor. The statement of Mr. Smith is undoubtedly true, as we learn that O. H. Downey, of Churubusco, has in his possession a copy of the paper. Just how long the HERALD of 1870 was continued we are unable to learn, as Mr. Smith lost track of it after some months and the only copy known of is one of the first publications and was a present to Mr. Downey by an old inhabitant of Butler. It was upon this ground that Mr. Downey changed the number, and this brings it down to the point as to whether the present paper is the result of the old HERALD, which was first published, and the fact that no one is harmed or benefitted makes the matter too silly to further discuss. Newspapers all over the country violate the postal laws in many ways and nothing is seldom said, but this is no violation. We ask our indulgent readers to excuse us for the explanation, and promise that we will not impose upon them with any more "slush" which they are not at all interested in. Bro. Higley has the reputation of nagging his competitors, and it might as well be the volume number as anything else.

PEARY DISCOVERS NORTH POLE.

Daring Naval Man Reaches Goal of His Life After Many Trials.

Indian Harbor, Via Cape Ray, Sept. 6.—"Stars and stripes nailed to north pole. "Peary."

From out of the arctic darkness there was flashed this message which stunned the scientific world and thrilled the heart of every layman. From the bleak coast of Labrador Peary gave to the world the news that he had attained his goal in the far north while at the same moment in far off Denmark, Dr. Frederick A. Cook, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was being dined and lionized by royalty for the same achievement. Two Americans have planted the flag of their country in the land of ice which man has sought to penetrate for four centuries and each ignorant of the other's conquest has flashed within a period of five days a laconic message of success to the waiting world. Cook in his first message to his countrymen was brief but noncommittal; Peary was even briefer but specific. "Stars and Stripes nailed to the north pole," he said. That was all, but never before have so few words conveyed to a people a greater meaning of a greater patriotic satisfaction. First word of Peary's success reached New York Monday afternoon in a dispatch to the Associated Press. It contained the bare announcement of his finding the pole. Almost simultaneously he had transmitted the news to London, repeating dramatically, and simply: "Stars and Stripes nailed to north pole." At the same time he similarly advised the Governor of Newfoundland. Both the old and new world were thus apprised of his great achievement practically at the same moment, and the excitement which followed attests to the high pitch of interest aroused over this climax of man's perseverance.

The cow was badly lacerated but the wolf was not much hurt. A number of dogs that were attracted by the fight were snapped at by the animal.

DR. COOK IS WINNER IN THE ARCTIC QUEST

Explorer Believed to Be Lost Returns from Trip That Was Crowned with Triumph.

NORTH POLE IS DISCOVERED

Telegram to Colonial Office in Copenhagen Says American Reached the Goal April 21, 1908.

START MADE IN SUMMER OF 1907

Navigator Last Heard from Eighteen Months Ago in the Ice of the Arctic Region.

Dr. Frederick Albert Cook, the American explorer, reached the north pole April 21, 1908, according to a telegram received at the colonial office in Copenhagen from Lervik, Norway.

Unless the cables lie, unless Cook has been the victim of polar madness, unless he has perpetrated upon the world the biggest canard of a generation, the search for the north pole has ended in a manner as dramatic as heroic. Almost alone, unsupported by any great scientific association, his departure unnoticed and unapplauded, two years ago Frederick A. Cook entered the awful arctic wastes. Unsought and unexpected, he has returned to rekindle the spirit of adventure which civilization after 6,000 years cannot destroy. No captain of industry, no financier, no famous scholar gave or found the fund which sent him on the search which has tempted men to death and disaster since the days of Davis and Baffin, of Ross and Franklin, of Hoelmskere and Hudson. His little expedition was fitted out by plain Jack Bradley, of Chicago, who in his spare time traveled through the empty places of the earth in the pursuit of game and adventure.

Dr. Cook started on his trip for the north pole in the summer of 1907, wintered on the coast of Elsmoreland about 500 miles from the pole and starting from a point north of Etah on Feb. 26, 1908, was within little more than a fortnight lost to the knowledge of the world. Word received from a point forty miles north of Cape Thomas Hubbard on March 17, 1908, said that the explorer expected to return not later than September, 1908, that everything had so far gone well, but that the weather was extremely cold. Then for seventeen months nothing was heard from him and by many he was given up for lost.

Admiral Winfield S. Schley, as head of the American Society for Polar Research, took an active interest in making plans for such an expedition, and not only contributed to a fund started last winter for the purpose of fitting out a vessel to go in search of the missing explorer, but during the last spring and summer has made apepals for assistance from all quarters.

Dr. Cook was accompanied by a Norwegian when he left Etah, Greenland, in March, 1908. He took with him eight Eskimos, four sledges and twelve dog teams. He was to make his way through Ellesmere Land. Dr. Cook was well equipped for his attempt, and started on his dash to the north with the utmost confidence. In a letter written from his winter quarters on Dec. 6, 1907, he explained the plans which he had conceived for reaching the pole.

Cook had had large experience as an explorer previous to the present trip. He is a physician and New Yorker. He was educated in the University of New York and the College of Physicans and Surgeons there, but instead of entering upon practice to any extent he took up exploration. When 26 years old he made his first journey to the north as a member of one of Peary's expeditions. He organized several other trips, gaining fame each time among scientists in many countries. Dr. Cook's home is in Brooklyn.

HORSE DRAGS HIM TO DEATH.

Nebraska Farmer Pulled in Front of Train by Balky Animal.

John King, a young farmer, was killed by a Union Pacific flyer near Central City, Neb., in an unusual way. He was leading a horse across the tracks with the halter wrapped around his arms. The animal balked on the track and although Reeves was safely across he was dragged back and under the wheels when the engine struck the horse.

MAP OF THE POLAR REGION, WHERE COOK TRIUMPHED.

ANOTHER YANKEE TRIUMPH.

Cook's Discovery Adds New Laurels to America's Achievements.

Dr. Cook's discovery of the north pole adds new laurels to America's achievements in the twentieth century. For nearly five hundred years adventurous explorers have vied for the honor of being first at the north end of the world. English, Dutch, Scandinavian, Italian and American scientists have battled their way into the arctic ice, some of them to within a comparatively short distance of the goal. It has remained for an American to win the victory. The 30,000 square miles of territory which Dr. Cook has annexed to the United States may never become a popular or populous resort, and the scientific value of his achievement is questionable, but he has rendered good service by laying bare the secret of farthest north and thus removing the lure of the unknown, and he has earned lasting personal fame. The ambitions of explorers will now concentrate upon the antarctic, and competition will be greatly stimulated.

By his own claims, which were put before the world through the slender cable thread from the Shetland island port of Lerwick, Dr. Frederick Albert Cook, of Brooklyn, has indulged himself in an experience such as no man has had since time began. More than kings and princes of the mythical world, more than navigators of the new world in the fifteenth century, has this man found a new thing under the sun.

On that hour in April, 1908, that this man stopped his dog sledges, pulled out his sextant, and with mittened fingers fixed the instrument on the north star, shining out of the arctic night, he found himself—if the world will credit his statement—at latitude 90 and longitude anything he pleased. He found that by shifting the position of his feet on the tip of the world he could throw himself across a span of longitudinal lines that swiftest train and steamer could not cover in forty days. Perhaps in a whimsical moment this Brooklyn explorer balanced himself on the toe of one bearskin boot and whirled from right to left. Presto! he had added a day to his life.

Whatever may have been the tricks that Cook played with the laws of the geographers, and the astronomers, whatever may have been the secrets of science that he discovered on that day when he caught the near angle of the north star almost directly over his head, must yet be told more at length by the explorer himself when once more he is back in the nearer frontier of the world's civilization.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

A new Carnegie library is to be erected at Bemidji, Minn., at a cost of $15,000.

A terrific wind and hail storm in the vicinity of Stephen, Minn., destroyed nearly 40,000 acres of small grain.

It appears that the West is sending a new appeal for laborers. The cry from Nebraska is not now for handy men about the farm, but for such as can work in factories. Help is wanted at once at Omaha, Lincoln and the smaller cities. A story of the same sort comes from Wisconsin. It has been said when there is a great demand for harvesters that even good wages are not as attractive as they might be because the term of employment is so short. Men do not care to make a long journey into a land that is strange to them, with the prospect of being turned adrift within a few weeks. But this demand for factory workers suggests permanent employment.

The Soo road has awarded a contract for the construction of a new passenger depot in Duluth at a cost of $100,000.

Some farmers have discovered that a ten-acre patch of potatoes at 300 bushels per acre will buy an automobile with one crop and leave the land available for another.

The interstate commerce commission predict a heavier year than has ever before been known in railroad activities. It is feared that the work may be greatly handicapped by a general shortage of cars. Crop prospects are bright, but there is a fear that roads may be taxed beyond their capacity.

Mystery in Woman's Death.

Mystery surrounds the discovery of the body of Mrs. Alberta Bantan, divorced wife of former United States Senator Phipps of Homer, La., in Brecknuridge Park, San Antonio, Tex. The body was found by the police after a telephone message had been received from a man who told of its exact location, but refused to give his name.

He escaped from the asylum Aug. 6 in an automobile. He was found at Rock Springs, Ohio. The young man is a firm member of the Edwin M. Hill Lumber Company.

County Seat Is Half Burned.

New Castle, seat of Henry County, Kentucky, fought Wednesday the most severe fire in its long history. The fire started in Bondurant's livery stable and spread to all the other buildings on that side of the main square. The exchange of the Cumberland Telephone Company was destroyed.

Rose Hoffman, aged 5 years, was killed, and her father, mother and sister were seriously injured in an automobile accident at Lowellville, Ohio.

KILLS MOTHER AND SELF.

Youth Who Was Denied Money with Which to Marry Dies.

A week after murdering his mother because she had refused him money with which to marry, George Simons, a young civil engineer, shot and killed himself in the home of his sweetheart, Viola Hartranft, in Pottsville, Pa. Simons slept for a week in a room adjoining that in which he had concealed the body of the slain woman. After killing his mother he carried the body to a room on the third floor of the house. Covering it with quicklime, he screwed fast the door and filled the cracks with parafin to make it appear a solid wall. He put up a sign with the word "Paint" on it, so that none would touch the door. When he killed himself, Simons was not even under suspicion for the crime.

HEAVY FROST CAUSES LOSS.

Corn in Some Localities Has Been Almost Totally Destroyed.

A killing frost passed over the central and northern portion of Michigan Wednesday night, doing hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of damage to vegetables and garden truck. At Muskegon the most severe early frost ever experienced in either Muskegon or Oceana Counties and the earliest in forty years was felt. Although slight frosts have quite often been felt a short time after Sept. 1, there has never been any heavy frost on that date since 1869. Corn in most localities has been nearly totally destroyed, while potatoes are also heavily hit. Garden produce was damaged seriously, and figures now on hand show the total loss in Muskegon and Oceana Counties to be at least $100,000. Whitehall, Montague and Hart also report heavy damage. The mercury went down to 30 degrees.

At Grand Haven the mercury fell to 28 degrees, and large quantities of tomatoes, melons, and other vegetables were destroyed. Vassar reports a heavy hoar frost in that section which ruined great quantities of beans, while at Flint potatoes, corn and buckwheat were damaged. The big cucumber crop was totally destroyed and many farmers will lose heavily on this crop, as they depended almost entirely upon it.

Extensive damage was done to the tobacco crop of Western Wisconsin by frosts. On some farms in La Crosse, Vernon, and Monroe Counties, the center of the tobacco industry in that State, the loss is total.

Heavy frost caused much fear that corn in the Indiana lowlands was damaged. Vegetation was almost frozen stiff and garden products rose in price to-day.

SWEPT BY A WALL OF WATER.

Flood Near Rawhide, Nev., Destroys 130 Buildings and Six Lives.

Squatter Town, a settlement just south of Rawhide, Nev., was swept by a ten-foot wall of water following a cloudburst in the hills Tuesday night and 130 buildings were destroyed. It is reported that two women and four children are missing. The cloud broke on the summit of the low hills north of the camp. In a few moments water was pouring down the slope.

Several structures weer torn from their foundations and carried down the street, while the crest of the flood was covered with furniture, animals and debris of all kinds. Gathering force as it poured down the channel, the water swept into and over Squatter Town. It formed a wall ten feet high as it crashed into the structures. Before the wave had passed 500 persons were homeless and their property was heaped in the basin at the foot of National hill.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Hilltop, at 1 to 3, easily won the Mohawk selling stake, one mile.

Over half a million dollars were expended in the construction of the new Speedway at Indianapolis.

William K. Vanderbilt's Scasick II. won the Prix de Longchamps, two miles and one furlong, at Paris.

J. R. Keene's Hilarious, 2:06, won the $7,500 Travers stakes for 3-year-olds, at a mile and a quarter at Saratoga.

Seven sectional records were broken in the Central A. A. U. championship meet in Chicago recently and the Chicago Athletic Association won all the honors with a total of 110 points out of a possible 126.

The winning trotters at Detroit, which repeated at Kalamazoo, were Margin, Country Jay, Baron McKinney and Lady Jones. The pacers were George Gano, Cecelian King, Walter W., and Lady Maude C.

Herman Long, at one time the most famous shortstop of the National League, and for years a member of the Boston team, is seriously ill at Denver. He went to Denver a few months ago because of lung trouble.

In the Ohio State Rifle Association shoot for the Catrow cup, Sergeant J. W. Hingle, U. S. marine corps, set up a perfect rifle record, when he hit 21 bull's-eyes in a row, seven each at three ranges, 800, 900 and 1,000 yards.

A. R. Kevist, the Brooklyn schoolboy, has broken the world's running record for two-thirds of a mile. He covered the distance in 2:47 3-5, or three-fifths of a second better than William G. George's time, made in New York City in 1882.

St. Yves, the long distance champion, was defeated by Percy Smallwood, the short distance runner, in a 12-mile race at Cincinnati.

Jack Johnson and James J. Jeffries have signed articles of agreement for a fight to come off some time within the next eight months. The big bout will determine the world's championship for heavyweights.

During the construction of his yacht, Hispania, King Alfonso, of Spain, evinced curiosity regarding conditions governing the contests for the American cup. The Spanish monarch is rumored to be a possible challenger for the trophy.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. F. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago trade says:

Favorable developments continue to strengthen the commercial position. Heavy payments through the banks are attested by aggregates exceeding those at this time last year, and the record of trading defaults again is satisfactory as to the effects upon credits. Financial conditions generally reflect an ample supply of money, but the improved demand for wider enterprise has created an advanced rate for accommodation.

Unsettled weather throughout the agricultural regions is a temporary hindrance to soil preparation, but the prospects of an unprecedented corn crop is not diminished. New demands in the leading industries come forward rapidly and there is notable increase in the movements of both East and West bound freight. Furnace and steel mill outputs in this district rise to new records and additional capacity under way is rushed to completion.

Railway equipment needs become more clearly defined as the crop season progresses, and heavy contracts are yet being booked for locomotives, cars, coaches and supplies. Structural steel remains in strong request.

Bank clearings, $249,153,694, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 12.9 per cent, and compare with $213,005,499 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 25 last week, against 26 last week, 22 in 1908 and 17 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 5 last week, 10 in 1908 and 5 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

As the season advances trade tends to show further expansion and industrial lines are becoming more active. Outputs are being increased by plans already in operation and frequent reports come to hand of resumptions by concerns that have been shut down for some time past. Under the circumstances employment is more general, pay-rolls are larger and more money is available for spending.

In a nutshell, trade is good; industry, particularly iron and steel, is active; outputs are close to normal, and prospects are pleasant, the most notable drawbacks being reduced yields of cotton and a smaller than earlier expected corn crop. Within the week house trade has expanded in marked degree, especial activity being noticed in demand for dry goods and millinery. Buyers have been in the markets in large numbers, and while they have taken hold quite freely they are nevertheless exercising much care in making purchases.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Sept. 2 were 160, against 201 last week, 210 in the like week of 1908, 130 in 1907, 121 in 1906 and 137 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 27, as compared with 34 last week and 17 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Scientific farming is making great progress through the dry western sections of this country. Grain is being successfully grown on the bench lands, where water cannot be conveyed, and where formerly nothing but sage brush grew. By conserving the moisture and following scientific methods, a fair yield of wheat and oats is secured. Alfalfa, which requires a great deal of moisture, cannot be raised here.

A Hazard of Hearts

CHAPTER XIII.

The bright frosty weather holding on, there was a sudden excitement of skating. The lake in the park was pronounced safe, and Stewart sent the tidings to the neighboring houses, as it was the largest piece of water in the country side. Stewart bestirred himself, ordering fires on the bank and refreshments there. It was the first stir of life about the place since the death of the eldest son, and although the widow looked patiently resigned, and ostentatiously retired into seclusion, everyone else, household and servants, seemed relieved and pleased.

Mathilde would have welcomed anything that brought action and kept thought at bay. She had not slept much at night of late, indeed had often paced the floor until the small hours; but if wakefulness had left dark lines under her eyes, they only seemed to accentuate her beauty.

She wore a tight-fitting dress of gray velvet corduroy, edged with dark fur, and admiring comments followed her movements, for she had from childhood been a show skater of the Montreal rink.

Mrs. Herbert's paraphernalia of crape and jet bristled more ostentatiously than usual, and it was with her most widowed smile that she turned to Mathilde. "I did not know that you were leaving off your mourning so soon."

Mathilde stared in rather a bewildered way. Her thoughts had flown to her dead father and to the autumn days of sorrow, not taking in the idea of either the dead child or of her husband's brother.

"I have not left off my mourning," she said, rather indignantly.

"It was I who persuaded her to get that dress. I hate to see her always in black." Stewart came promptly to the rescue, although he had apparently been deep in local politics with Norman.

"Oh, if you call that mourning!" Flora responded with a pitying smile.

But these little pin-pricks had no power over Mathilde now. The only bitterness was in the remembrance how Stewart had come in when she was looking over the tailor's patterns, and had insisted on the choice of that one.

The lake in its sheltered dell was a bright scene that afternoon. Several parties arrived in carriages, and Mathilde and Stewart had necessarily to play the host together, an outward bond over the inward discord. Young and prosperous, welcoming others to their future kingdom, many a one that day admired the couple and many a one envied them.

"The exiled prince welcomed back to his own," Norman Stewart said in a low voice to his cousin Nellie, as they skated about at the further end of the lake, watching the groups near the landing.

Although these two skated well, and knew that they looked well on skates, there was none of the animation of the scene on their faces as they loitered there together, whirling about idly in long curves.

"They have everything their own way. What is the good of our thinking that there is something queer about her, when they both have Sir James under their thumb? I'm no earthly help to you, and might as well write to know when I can go to the Harpers."

"You must not leave before I do," he said, with calm authority. "When you brought me here, I thought yours and Flora's idea of some mystery very far-fetched; but now I am sure that it is so."

"But what could it be that would matter? They must be married," she interrupted pettishly.

Scarcely heeding her, he went on. "I can guess at nothing, though several times during the past week I have felt as though on the point of putting my finger on the mystery. The one thing that I am certain of is that she never was on that ranch of his."

"Why?"

"I couldn't give any definite reason, only I am certain of it."

"But where did she come from, then?"

"I think—mind you, I only think—that she is some divorcee, an Englishwoman of rank perhaps, whom he has picked up in New York or Montreal."

"But the missionary, and the wife and child."

"That's all some mistake. The child, I am sure, never existed."

"But say it were so; how would it benefit us?"

"Only by our bringing out some scandal that would set Sir James against them, and make him prefer to leave you and me the money. Fancy the wrath of the pious Flora!"

Nellie laughed with real enjoyment, and Norman went on.

"My only hope lies in her betraying herself in talk. Only leave her to me."

"Well, haven't I left her to you?" she answered with fresh pettishness. "You must confess that it's rather hard on me looking at you flirting with her, and at Flora's pious spooning with that gaunt parson of hers. She's going to marry him, you know!"

"Is she? Whether she gets it or not?"

"Oh, yes. She has plenty anyway of her own. Greedy creature! How she loves money!"

There was the suppressed spite of weeks in Nellie's tone.

"Well, so do we, for the matter of that," he answered carelessly. "If only she would take herself off now to the rectory, and we could find out what is really queer about these two, you and I might have a good chance with the old man yet."

"I'm afraid it's no go," she said despondently.

"Come, cheer up! Well, I must go back to duty with la belle sauvage." And they turned towards the more frequented part of the lake, where Mathilde was holding her little court.

Flushed and animated by the cheerful stir and exercise, she swept about in undulating lines, or poised on one foot as her progress was arrested by friends. Norman paused by her now.

"You sweep along with just the dip of a gray-winged seagull over the waves," he began.

"Bah," with a little shudder, "I would as soon be likened to a vulture, I hate them so."

"But why? They are so beautiful," he urged, feeling that his pretty speech had fallen flat.

"The very thought of them brings a sense of desolation. I have watched them, whirling and clamoring, when I have been so wretched,' she answered shortly; then with a swift recognition of the rush personality of the remark, she added with a laugh, "I am such a wretched sailor, you know."

If Norman were too keen-witted to be baffled by the remark he gave no sign thereof.

"I am so sorry," he said penitently, but what he thought was:

"Touched again! A sea voyage is evidently a mine to be worked. The mere mention of it upsets the lady's self-control."

Just then Mathilde saw her husband skating up to the bank to welcome a group of newcomers.

There were one or two girls and men, and surely—surely, that fair-haired youth was a familiar figure! Yes, it was Charlie Hudson, her adorer of the St. Lawrence! Now were the skies about to fall, and her public discomfiture to be sealed! Swiftly the mad impulse crossed her brain to fling off her skates and rush away—anywhere out of the reach of the critical eyes which seemed to encircle her on every side.

Mathilde's second and truer impulse was the one on which she acted, and a few long strokes took her to her husband's side just as he greeted them. She would fall fighting, and if she left him to-morrow, he would have no cause to despise her memory. The girls she knew slightly—bright, jolly country girls, without too keen perceptive faculties, and with brothers of the same type.

Her greeting to them was cordial but hurried.

"So glad to see you! Brought your skates? That's right."

She had not even time to exchange one glance with Stewart, who was overpowering Hudson with effusion that left no room for words on his part. Apparently, though, he had no words at command, simply staring in mute amazement at Mathilde.

Swiftly she bore down upon him with outstretched hand.

"What a wonderful meeting! Who would have expected us to come across each other like this? Isn't it fun?"

With every sense on the alert, she was aware while speaking that Stewart was enticing the others towards a bench to put on their skates, and a forlorn hope braced her to effort. With courage the position might yet be retrieved, and of that she felt plenty at command.

"You mustn't lose a moment; the days are so short," she heard Stewart noisily insisting.

The amazement cleared from the boy's face into pure delight.

"Miss Thorne!" he gasped. "What luck to find you here! I didn't even know that Stewart was the right man until I saw him here. And you are staying with his Canadian wife, I suppose. They talked a lot about her, coming over, and that was what puzzled me."

Mathilde's face paled and flushed, and she looked wildly round. Norman Stewart was the only one within possible hearing distance, and he, stooping down to readjust his skate, may not have heard.

"Hush," she said in a low voice. "Put on your skates, and come up to the other end of the lake with me. I have a secret to trust to you."

Hudson staring into her set, strained face, saw something there which compelled him to silent obedience. From the group where the newcomers were being refreshed with various hot drinks, James Stewart called to Norman, who slowly skated off, and the two were left alone.

"Please, tell me what is the matter?" Hudson urged anxiously.

"Don't look so miserable," Mathilde laughed, with a touch of compunction; "and try not to look as though I were telling you anything startling. Don't you know that I am your hostess, Mrs. James Stewart?"

The boy groaned; for the dream that he had dreamed still hovered around him, and such an awakening was bitter exceedingly.

"Please not to look as though anything were happening!" she urged. "Otherwise you may do me serious harm."

He was thoroughbred, and answered to the touch.

"Tell me what you want," he said hoarsely, "and I will do it."

"I know that I can rely upon you," Mathilde went on, speaking rapidly. All the time they were skating towards the lonelicst corner of the lake.

"These people here all think—must go on thinking—that I have been married five years and lived in the Northwest. I think that no one heard you call me Miss Thorne. You must be careful to have only known me as Mrs. Stewart; in fact, the less you speak or know of me the better."

They had paused, facing each other, hidden from everyone by a jutting point of reeds and bushes. His face had grown paler still.

"I don't understand," he began in a troubled fashion.

"That's it," she interrupted. "You can never understand, but you must help me without understanding."

"I would do much to help you," he said simply. "But if there is any wrong to you in all this, I will not help it on."

"You mean," and there was a deep flush on her face, "that you think I am not really married?"

He stared horror-struck.

"Good Heavens, no! How could I think such a thing of you? But something wrong there must be somewhere."

"There is no wrong to me," she answered firmly. "I am wronging no one, not even myself. Does that content you?"

"I suppose it must," he agreed slowly; "but will you trust me no more than this? Think how wretched I shall be about you," he urged.

"You had better forget that you have ever seen me," she answered gloomily. "But if it is any satisfaction to you, you can know that the whole affair is one of money interests of my husband's, and is only to right an attempted wrong to him."

"If you would only tell me that you are happy," he persisted.

She laughed. "A small 'only.' Well, at any rate, if I am not, it is my own deliberate doing, and no one can help me."

"Are you sure that there is nothing that I can do for you?" he asked.

"Nothing, save to remember that it was Mr. and Mrs. Stewart with whom you made a voyage, and to take as little interest in them as possible. Go back now to the Riddell girls, and avoid the home people here. How long do you stay in the neighborhood?' she asked with some anxiety.

"I can leave to-morrow if you wish," he answered a bit proudly.

He detected her eagerness, and naturally did not relish it.

She was beyond mincing matters.

"The sooner you go, the better for me." Then, seeing the pain in his face, she added: "Forgive me, but I am in a tight place."

"I will go to-morrow," he said sadly; "only tell me one thing. You were not his wife on board ship?"

"We were married in London two days after landing. You see that I trust you. Now come back, and remember to stay by the Riddell girls."

"Won't you say good-bye?"

"I will say good-bye all you like, but I cannot shake hands. There is no knowing who may be watching. Now come."

Silently they skated back and separated. A set of lancers was forming, and Mathilde was immediately carried off by Norman to join it.

She would rather have remained free to move about, but still she was doing something in occupying his attention, and gradually the tension of her nerves relaxed as she saw how exactly to the same degree his manner was marked with the somewhat languid homage of before.

The sun was sinking lower and redder, and long bluish shadows from the wooded slope stole across the white ice.

"I trust that to-morrow may be a repetition of to-day," Norman said.

"Repetitions are never very nice, are they?" she said with a shiver.

"In this case I think they might be."

She did not answer, for she was watching Miss Fearon, who had joined the group where the Misses Riddell and Hudson stood by the fire, quaffing mulled claret. The sight made her uneasy, and yet it was a dubious relief to see her husband skate up to them and lead his cousin away.

A chilled sense of utter desertion crept around her heart, and she had to control the impulse to see one more kind glance from the loyal-hearted boy. Well, she would still be faithful to her bargain, though her husband's taunt rang ever through her brain. Then—well, then, she knew of a remote Breton village, where she would be hidden from all whom she had ever known—where she would see no one save artists and peasants.

She started from her thoughts to find Norman's keen, gray eyes fixed on her face, eyes which were his strongest resemblance to his cousin James.

"Your young friend seems very devoted to Miss Riddell," he said.

"Yes, they came together, you know."

"I saw them, and I saw the rapture with which he greeted you."

She could not detect any significance in his words.

"He crossed with us a month ago," she answered carelessly. "He is a nice boy, and used to fag for me perpetually."

"But apparently you had not even told him where you were going?"

"I suppose not, although I certainly thought that Jem had done so. In the hurry at the end one sometimes does not even say good-bye."

She was growing more uneasy at this persistence, although knowing that it might be casual, but fortunately just then the set ended and she was free.

(To be continued.)

THE CROSS-WAYS.

Time Comes When the Older Sister Must Step Aside.

Sibyl, her pretty girlish face angry and mutinous, dashed from the room, slamming the door behind her. In the silence that followed, her last words still seemed to echo.

"It isn't fair—just because you're the oldest and have always had things, that we should never have anything. It's our turn. How would you have liked it when you were eighteen? You've had your good times. It's just downright selfish of you not to let us have ours, and I'm going to say it out for once, so now!"

Virginia drew a long breath. It had been "said out" unquestionably. Going to the door, she turned the key. It had been coming for a long time—some such crisis as this; now that it had come, she was going to face it without flinching. She seated herself before her dressing-table and looked steadily in the glass. Yes, it was true—she was not so pretty as she had been; the first girlish bloom was gone—gone to Sibyl and Evelyn.

"Point one," she said, slowly. "Virginia Crane, you are jealous of your little sisters.

"Point two. Sibyl is right. You have had your good times, and it is their turn.

"Point three. Something must be done at once. What shall it be?"

There was a long silence after the third point. Virginia was thinking. There were several things she might do. She could go abroad with the Clarendons. She thought that over a while, and then put it aside. "I won't shirk!" she declared. She could take up settlement work, for instance. That, too, she rejected.

"It wouldn't," she said, with grim humor, "be fair to the poor. They have enough to bear without having to help out the poor rich."

There remained one way, a very distasteful one, but she could do it—at least, she could give it a trial. She would study the art of being an older sister. It would not be easy for her to step aside gracefully, not half so easy as for some girls, but she could try; she could study it as she had studied over her music. For an hour she sat there, thinking it out. Then she opened her door.

"Sibyl!" she called.

Sibyl, half-ashamed and half-defiant, came hesitatingly.

"I've changed my mind about the concert," Virginia said. "You are right—it is your turn. I'll stay and entertain Aunt Gracia. And would you like to wear my string of pearls to your party?"

Sibyl stared in bewilderment, the color flooding her face. "O Virginia," she gasped, "do you mean it? I—" impetuously she threw her arms about her sister's neck—"I was such a horrid pig!" she cried.

And suddenly to Virginia there came a strange thought. Suppose in the "good times" she were missing the joy of being a sister!—Youth's Companion.

Startling.

"Yes, our table is always up to date," boasted the landlady. "We have those beautiful red candles on it at suppertime."

"Candles for supper!" gasped the prospective boarder. "Madam, do you think I am an Eskimo?"

Ways of Women

Fireless Cooking.

In fireless cooking there are certain things to be remembered by the inexperienced cook. Oen is that if a dish is left indefinitely in the cooker it will sour. Soups, stews, vegetables and such things must be removed after twenty-four hours, and less in hot weather. Another thing is that some foods require a longer time on the fire before being put in the cooker than others do. According to Harper's Bazaar, cereals may take only ten minutes, and tough meat half an hour; it is best to find out something about the length of time the different things require before beginning to use the cooker.

Generally speaking, all indigestible things take longer than the rest; oatmeal, beef stew, corned beef and beans need more time than steamed puddings, rice and chicken. A third thing to remember is this: Everything that takes a very long time to cook is improved and the process hastened if, when the time is half up and the food cooled, the pail is removed and reheated without opening it, and put back again.

In all cooking also you must be careful not to uncover the pail with the food in it before putting it in the box. It must be kept tightly covered from the time it is put on the fire or the steam will escape and the meat or soup cool so that it cannot cook. Put everything in as quickly as possible, and cover at once.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Clam broth is good for a weak stomach.

Cranberry poultice is recommended for erysipelas.

Daily exercise with light dumb bells eventually cures round shoulders.

Try taking cod liver oil in tomato catsup if you want to make it palatable.

Mustard plasters made with the white of an egg do not blister the skin.

To cure a sting of bee or wasp, mix common earth with water and apply at once.

When a cut will not heal, saturate a piece of absorbent cotton with coal oil and bind on.

Nothing takes the oil from the skin more quickly than a soap that does not agree with it.

If you wish to scent the false pompadour, lay it on the rose jar or on top of it and cover for several hours.

A sure relief from thirst when water is not to be obtained is derived from holding a dry pebble or a button in the mouth.

Buttermilk is excellent for the complexion and may be used daily, washing with it, letting it dry on, and then rinsing in warm but not hot water.

Boy's Suit.

The boy's suit made after this model is certain to win his own approval. It is masculine in effect, it allows him to run and to race to his heart's content and is quite easy to put on and to take off. At the same time that it possesses all these advantages, it is becoming and attractive to the looker on, and it can be made from a great many different materials.

Sneeze and Sigh.

A sneeze is exactly like a cough, save that the obstruction occurs in the nostrils, owing to the deposit of some irritant or foreign matter, and that the blast of air is thrown out through the nose instead of through the throat and month. Why do we sigh? When grieved or depressed the tendency is to hold the breath. This means that the body suffers for oxygen; and the long, deep breath which we call a sigh obtains for itself the necessary amount of oxygen.—Popular Science Siftings.

Packing Hats.

In packing your hat for the summer vacation see that the crown is well stuffed, so it will not become crushed. It is not necessary to use tissue paper for this. Stockings, handkerchiefs and other soft articles of clothing will answer the purpose quite as well. If the hat boasts of ribbon loops see that these, too, are kept in shape with crushed tissue paper. Pin the hat carefully into the trunk, so it will not slip around in transit.

Convalescence.

It is a common error to suppose that health and strength depend on taking plenty of strong meat and drink, living in warm rooms, clothing snugly and avoiding cold air, and especially cold winds, says Good Health. The sooner the invalid gets his mind free from this and makes a start toward hardening his body and accustoming himself to exercise the muscles in a healthful fashion, the better will the possibilities be for his recovery. The conditions which make for health and happiness are: A moderate diet of plain, wholesome food, a life of regularity, and above all, healthful exercise in the open air. A patient may be very weak and even confined to bed, but so long as there is no fever or existing inflammatory conditions that might be aggravated by activity, nothing need hinder him from making a start in physical culture.

Fretting Injures the Stomach.

"Do you know that your stomach slumps—actually slumps from two to four inches in your body if you make a practice of worrying and fretting?" said a woman lecturer. "First your mouth droops till you can't lift the corners of it. Your chin gets big—oh, you're anything but an impressive picture then! But worse comes. Your stomach slumps and coils up on itself, and your diaphragm sort of falls on your stomach and your stomach gets irritated and creates poisonous gases.

"Then your heart feels as if it were giving out, and you say: 'Oh, I don't know what's the matter; I can't climb these stairs—I must have heart disease.' Heart! Legs are to climb stairs with, and poor misguided women think they've got to pull themselves up with their hearts.

"Stop playing dirges inside yourselves. Tuck your abdomens back into the right places; don't worry and you'll be all right."

Say Something Good.

Pick out the folks you like the least,
and watch them for a while;
They never waste a kindly word, they never waste a smile,
They criticise their fellowmen at every chance they get;
They never found a human just to suit their fancy yet.
From them I guess you'd learn some things, if they were pointed out—
Some things that every one of us should know a lot about.
When someone "knocks" a brother,
pass around the loving cup—
Say something good about him, if you have to make it up.
—H. Fontaine Little.

To Make Curtains Hang Straight.

Curtains, especially those reaching the sill only, are often difficult to make fall into graceful folds. There is often too much fullness in one place and too little in another, despite the many efforts to improve their condition.

This can be remedied by laying the curtain, when ready to be hung, along the ironing board evenly. It should then be doubled and very lightly pressed with a cool iron. Fold again and press and continue folding until it measures only about four inches. Place on the rod, and the curtain will hang gracefully. The iron should not be so hot as to form deep creases.

For the Business Girl.

A clean blotter on the desk.
A fresh ribbon on the machine.
Well kept finger nails.
A note book to jot down important memoranda.
Silence when you feel like tattling.
Loyalty to your firm.
A cheery "Good morning."
A little consideration for the feelings of others.

Ptomaine Poisoning.

The first thing to do is to cause vomiting by drinking freely of warm water and putting the finger in the throat or some emetic. Then take a full injection of some warm water into the bowels and drink freely of olive oil. If there is pain in the abdomen or bowels, apply hot cloths, frequently changed.

She Was the Party.

A matron of the most determined character was encountered by a young woman reporter on a country paper, who was sent out to interview leading citizens as to their politics. "May I see Mr. ——?" she asked of a stern-looking woman who opened the door at one house. "No, you can't," answered the matron, decisively. "But I want to know what party he belongs to," pleaded the girl. The woman drew up her tall figure. "Well, take a good look at me," she said. "I'm the party he belongs to."—Universalist Leader.

SNAP SHOTS AT WOMEN

The Brooklyn Suffrage Association recently celebrated its fortieth anniversary.

Italy gives dowries to poor girls. In Sicily alone there are 634 societies for this purpose, with an endowment of $3,100,000.

If Japanese parents do not find matrimonial companinos for their sons and daughters, both parents and children are looked upon as disgraced.

The Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw declares that this year's congress of International Woman's Suffrage Alliance has accomplished more than The Hague conference.

Mrs. Helen Woods Miller left $20,000 to Brown University to be used in its department of comparative anatomy. The rest of her estate is to go to the Woman's College, Baltimore.

Mary Chilton was not the first person to land from the Mayflower at Plymouth, according to investigations by Samuel Arthur Dent, which have been recorded in the proceedings of the Bostonian Society.

Mrs. Susan Frances Hemenway, who was one of the chief heirs of Mr. Rose, who founded the Rose Polytechnic at Terre Haute, in her turn left about $500,000 to the institution and an entire block in the heart of the city for the use of the school.

Cause of Crowded Teeth.

When a man had more teeth than his jaw could conveniently hold, it used to be the theory of dentists to explain that he had inherited the large teeth of one parent and the small jaw of the other. Recently some good observers, notably Dr. Sim Wallace and Dr. Harry Campbell of England, stated that the trouble is not hereditary; that it had its beginning in each person's babyhood, and that our teeth are poor and irregular and our jaws contracted because we do not exercise these parts sufficiently during the weaning process. In support of this statement, they point out the fact that the first set of teeth is practically never irregular, never overlaps and is very seldom defective.

A Drying Hint.

Every washwoman knows the nuisance of hanging out a large family's handkerchiefs, collars, finger bowl doilies and other small articles. To pin them to the line takes time and patience. One old colored woman has hit on a plan of drying that saves her many minutes. She had her mistress make her a long shallow bag of strong white mosquito netting, with a draw string at the top and tapes sewed at the corners and at intervals of 3 or 4 inches between. When the small articles were ready for hanging on the line they were laid carefully in the bag, the string drawn up so they would not blow out and the bag pinned to the line by the tapes, for the sun and air to filter through the open meshes of the net.

Five thousand people attended the Onion Day celebration at Wolf Lake recently and Congressman Cline was among those who delivered addresses. Whitley County onion growers won the sweepstakes prize for the best showing.

At Carmel a horse show will be held September 29 and 30. The Indianapolis News Newsboys' Band will furnish the music one day and an effort is being made to engage the Noblesville Military Band for the second day. Some very handsome premiums have been hung up for the winners.

John Brickley, aged 10 years, and Earl Hollingsworth, aged 9, were playing together in Anderson when the former asked the latter if he would like to play Indian. "How do you play it?" asked the Hollingsworth boy. Without making a reply the Brickley boy drew a small revolver of 22-caliber from his pocket and fired at his companion. The bullet struck the boy in the temple, making a wound which the physicians believe will cause his death.

The authorities of Vigo County do not know what they are to do with the insane of the county. A number of incurables have been returned from the State institution at Indianapolis, because the county now has more than its quota. The County Poor Farm has all it can care for, and Sheriff Walsh says perhaps ten are under private care in the county. Several are in the jail. Last week seven persons were adjudged insane in the county.

With three different mowers at work in the same field a team of mules driven by Frank Catt, living eight miles west of Petersburg, took fright and ran away. They circled the field, cutting everything in their path. One of the drivers turned out, but the other could not and one of his horses was struck by the knife and a leg was cut off at the knee. The driver jumped off the back of the mower and escaped injury, but both mowers are almost total wrecks.

Allen H. Craig, living three miles northeast of Scottsburg, was crushed to death while cutting timber on the farm of a Mr. Van-Winkle. Craig left his home in the morning, taking his lunch with him. When he did not return in the evening an investigation was made and his dead body was found under a log which had evidently rolled from the wagon. The man's shoulders were terribly crushed, but just when he was killed will never be known, as he was alone. The man was 32 years old and is survived by a widow and two children.

Falling from the second story of the home in Newcastle, the 18-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mendenhall escaped without injury. The child's mother was in an upstairs room and for a moment her attention was detracted from the child, which was playing in the room. The child climbed into the window and fell to the lawn below, a distance of about fifteen feet. The frantic mother rushed to the yard, expecting to find the child dead, but it was up and toddling around, seemingly none the worse for the experience. Beyond a bruise or two the child escaped injury.

Fred Sourman, 15 years of age, son of Henry Sourman, near Bristol, may lose his left leg. A mowing machine nearly severed the limb at the ankle joint a few days ago.

Eli Greensfelder, of Logansport, suffered a severe attack of heart failure as the result of sudden fright at the appearance of a mouse which leaped from a box of clothing and ran along his arm. His condition was so serious for a time that a physician had to be called.

Harvey Reeves, who died in an insane hospital and whose body was brought to Terre Haute for burial, became insane from grief because as conductor of a train on the Vandalia road his mistake caused the loss of two lives. That was seven years ago.

The Ohio Oil Company recently completed a well in the Oakland City field that is estimated to produce over four hundred barrels a day. The well is south of the main field and has created much excitement. There is a general rush for leases in the neighborhood and fancy prices are being paid.

It is given out that Governor Marshall weighs 132½ pounds, six and one-half of which have been gained during his four weeks stay at Petoskey.

While taking out the casing from an oil well near Petersburg, six feet of it fell and instantly killed Wm. Shafer and broke the left arm of William Coleman.

Mott A. Kaylor, of Clear Creek Township, Huntington County, has been appointed a member of the faculty of the Central University of Iowa, located at Pella.

Mrs. R. A. Brown, of Huntington, who has been spending the summer at Northport, Mich., was attacked by a large bald eagle a few days ago, but succeeded in beating the huge bird off before it had inflicted more than a few scratches upon her.

Chocolate quinine proved so toothsome to the 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Emely, of Huntington, that the little tot drank eight tablespoonsful of the medicine during the absence of her mother. The child will recover, but may be deaf as a result of the dose.

In the court of Justice Bowmaster, Silas Kaufman, a log hauler, residing in Cambridge City, pleaded guilty to the charge of blocking the highway so that Silas Clark, who filed the charge, was compelled to run his automobile up the side of an embankment, in order to pass him.

Bitten by a snake, the young daughter of Edward Martin, who lives in Logansport, was thrown into convulsions. Physicians say the child will recover. The little girl was walking through high weeds near her home, when she stepped on a snake. The reptile sank its fangs deep into the child's bare foot.

Charles E. Butcher, Deputy State Factory Inspector, was run over at Bloomington by Mrs. Theodore Adams, wife of a furniture dealer, who drove a buggy around the corner of the public square and knocked him down. Butcher was not hurt seriously, it appears, though badly bruised all over him, the horses' hoofs striking his chest and the wheels going over his body. His clothing, especially his coat, was torn to shreds. Butcher lives at Connersville.

The business section of Peru recently has had a strange visitor in the form of a full-grown buzzard. The bird is probably a tame one escaped from a cage, but so far its owner has not been found. It has attracted much attention flying low through the mercantile section and perching upon the buildings. Singularly enough, it has visited all the buildings that were formerly occupied by saloons and are now empty. Many attempts have been made by boys to catch the buzzard, but it is too sly to be caught. It does not appear to scare at anything. No attempt has been made to kill it.

Henry Moore, a laborer, was instantly killed at Monon while assisting an aeronaut in preparing his balloon for an ascension. Moore was watching the process of inflating the gas bag when the balloon, caught by a gust of wind, started upward. Dangling ropes wrapped about the legs of Moore and lifted him from the ground. While Moore was struggling to seize the ropes and right himself, he became entangled in some telegraph wires and fell, head downward, to the ground. He was dead when physicians reached him. Two of Moore's children were in the crowd that witnessed the accident.

An unusual train was pressed into service on the country roads of the northern part of Bartholomew County when a traction engine was seen hauling a half dozen farm wagons loaded with men, women and children. The St. Louis crossing Baptist Sunday School held its annual picnic in Flatrock Township and the picnic grounds are quite a distance from the town. J. C. Phelps, who owns a thrashing outfit, decided to come to the rescue of those who were going to have to walk. He borrowed several farm wagons and hitched them to his engine. He then invited the people to climb in, opened the throttle and took the Sunday School Limited to the picnic.

Charley, the 8-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hickman, of Peru, found a torpedo and exploded it, with the result that he lies in a dangerous condition. The torpedo was one that had been lost by some railroad men who were engaged at repairing the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction track, in the eastern part of the city. The boy knew what the torpedo was, but had no idea as to the power of the explosive. He placed it on the steel rail and struck it with a stone. Two hours later he regained consciousness, with one finger off entirely, the flesh of his hand badly mangled, one eye destroyed, three gashes in his face and an injured shoulder. Unless lockjaw results he will recover.

Alexander C. Major, an old soldier, and Miss Millie Taylor, of Paragon, went to Martinsville to attend a reunion, and were married by Justice Brown on the courthouse lawn in the presence of a large crowd.

A cow belonging to Harve Clark on the Dorwin farm at Monmouth last week gave birth to triplet calves, all of which are living and as well formed and as large as ordinary calves. One is frail, however, and it is thought will not live long.

Frank Long, a concrete contractor of Elkhart, hanged himself because of despondency, due to indebtedness and drinking. His wife found his body swinging in the garret of his dwelling. Long was 49 years old and leaves a widow and two children.

Jack Penrod, of Bluffton, is at the point of death from an accident sustained last week. He was riding home on a bicycle and carrying an umbrella to shelter him from the rain. He collided in the darkness with an approaching rig and was struck by a shaft and hurled to the ground.

THE OLD KNAPP MURDER

The First Great Crime in DeKalb County's Criminal History

The following article is taken from the Auburn Courier of April 30, 1903, and reproduced by the request of James Cherry:

Among the familes worthy of mention in the early history of Union township, DeKalb county, is that of Jacob Knapp, who located in the woods, five miles east of Auburn in an early day. This was a German family of the most ignorant and superstitious class The family was originally composed of the father and mother, four girls and one boy, a half idiot who always went by the name of "Jakey." At the time we write of, Jakey and "Liza Jane," were the only children at home. The old man was very short in stature, and always spoke a broken language between the German and English.

They were very eccentric in their ways and made fun for and were the laughing stock of the people for many miles around. The old man was bald headed and went bare headed where ever he went and Jakey was always at his side. They sometimes drove a yoke of oxen, other times one ox and one cow and their chattering could be heard for nearly a mile in advance of their coming.

At one time they started to go to mill at Spencerville, a distance of about 15 miles. On the way they had to cross a swale or slough where the mud had become very deep, and the old man had some doubts about being able to cross in safety, but after looking the matter over he said, "Now Shakey you shust sthay on dish side and sthart him in, and I goes on de udder side and "haws" him out " The cattle were large and by the name of "Buck and Brim." When the old man had stationed himself on the opposite bank, with a large cudgel in hand, he ordered Jake to whip the cattle into the mud hole which was done, the old man all the while waving the whip in a vigorous manner and shouting at the top of his voice, "Haw Buck, gee Prin, haw Buck, gee Prin, haw Buck, gee Prin," while Jake remained on the other bank yelling as loudly as he could, "whoa, whoa, whoa," but the cattle paid no attention to either, and waded quietly through the mud and came out safely on the other side. When they were safely landed the old man straightened himself to full length and exclaimed, "Now Shakey, you got tammed pugger you, what for you tell Buck to whoa when I tell Buck to go?" Now there was a man in the woods near this place who saw and heard all and related the matter as above given. And this little anecdote or incident is well remembered to this day.

They lived very near to a very large swamp in which racoons and other small game abounded, and they had a small dog which was one of the finest "coon" dogs in the country. This dog would often go out into the woods and swamps unaccompanied by his owner, and give notice of the same by his barking, when some one would go and capture the game. On one of these occasions the old man and Jakey took the ax and went out to where the dog had a racoon up a small slim tree. The old man concluded to climb the tree and club the coon down to be killed by Jakey and the dog, but at the same time gave Jakey strict orders not to use the ax. But when the old man climbed to the top of the tree and knocked the coon down, it fell at the root of the tree and was seized by the dog, but Jake seized the ax and struck at the coon, but instead cut the dog's nose off. The old man in rage exclaimed. "Now Shakey you got tammed pugger you, I tell you not take de ax."

But further along about the year 1859, the old man was brutally murdered by his wife Elizabeth, assisted by Jakie. No real cause could ever be given for the dastardly deed, except their depraved brutal nature as the small amount of property was scarcely sufficient to induce them to do the deed The facts gatharnd were about as follows:

The old man who then was in very feeble health was induced to go into the milk house, for some beans. The house and milk house were only a few feet apart with an overshot roof extending to and over the well.

The well was curbed with a holidw sycamore log to within three feet of the top from thence it was curbed up square with split planks. The well was about fifteen feet deep. When close to the well they pushed him into it hoping thus to sink him and then give out word that he had accidently fallen into the well and drowned. But when once in he showed more strength than they had anticipated and struggled hard for his life, hence they had to use more violent means to accomplish his death. So they obtained an old dull ax and a piece of clapboard with a heavy but end. With the ax they struck at his head which was so far down that they could barely reach it. With this they hacked the curbing full of marks and the skin of the head was cut in slices. With the board they would punch his hands when he would clutch on the end of the sycamore gum until the skin was pretty well broken off them. There were 58 wounds in all, and 46 of these were on the head, but the skull was only broken twice.

A son-in-law of Mr. Knapp by the name of Place, discovered him in the well early in the evening and went to a few neighbors and told that Knapp was drowned in the well, and asked for help. The news soon spread and by midnight a large crowd had gathered at the home. Some favored taking him out immediately, but the more timid said no, not until the coroner who had been sent for, should arrive. But finally the former council prevailed and preparation was made to take him out. A large fire had been lighted in the yard and a lot of shell bark from hickory trees was secured and a large torch made to throw light in the well Perry Blodgett and Isaac Speer were the two persons who drew him out of the well. When they had lifted him far enough out of the water the light shone upon his head, exposing a large gash, at sight of which John Pyle exclaimed "My God! men, that man has been murdered " Again he was allowed to drop back into the water and the claim advocated that he should not be removed until the arrival of the coroner. The body was taken from the well about midnight and remained stretched out on an old door till noon the next day. All this time the old woman remained in the house coherently crying "Oh de goot Lordt my goot little olt husband is deadt, what will I do for preadt."

After the inquest was held and she was invited she came out to see him, repeating the above phrase continually

She was arrested charged with the murder and had a preliminary hearing and was committed for trial in court and lodged in jail. In a few days after her comittal Sheriff Samuel W. Ralston had her meals carried to her on a plate with a common case knife to eat with. She took this knife and sharpened it on a stove pipe and with it cut a hole in the lower part of her abdomen and drew out a portion of an intestines from which she cut a piece about two inches long and threw it in the stove. She immediately took to her bed and all expected her to die. The authorities ordered her cofflin made, which was made by Reuben Ettinger and William Maxwell. But to the great surprise of all the cut healed and the refuse passed out at that place instead of through the natural organs. She recovered so far as to be tried for the crime, the trial being held in the M. E church in Auburn. The trial resulted in conviction and she was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The case was prosecuted by W. H. Dills of Auburn and she was defended by Timothy R Dickinson. Both are now dead. The coffin was used a few years afterward to bury Michael Campbell, an old man who died with delirium tremens.

She was sent to the penitentiary but was pardoned out a few months after being confined and came back and went to Michigan and lived for a period of some ten or twelve years with her son-in-law, Coleman Jones. All this time the refuse continued to pass off through this incision, she having a tin can fitted to the place to catch the offal.

This was the first murder trial and conviction in this county. There was not sufficient proof against "Jakey" to warrant putting him on trial and he was released, and lived for a number of years with his brother-in-law, Mr. Leonard Hoodlmier four miles east of Auburn. But later he was taken to the county farm where he died a few years since.

Are You Sure Your Kidneys are Well

Many rheumatic attacks are due to uric acid in the blood. But the duty of the kidneys is to remove all uric acid from the blood. Its presence there shows the kidneys are inactive.

Don't dally with "uric acid solvents." You might go on till doomsday with them, but until you cure the kidneys you will never get well. Doan's Kidney Pills not only remove uric acid, but cure the kidneys and then all danger from uric acid is ended. Here is Butler testimony to prove it:

Henry Barnhart, retired, Butler, Ind., says: "I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago and can say that they benefited me greatly. I had sciatic rheumatism in my left limb and could not put my foot to the ground. I knew that my kidneys were out of order as the secretions were highly colored and filled with sediment. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Phillips' drug store and after using them a short time, I was so greatly relieved that I have not been bothered since. I have told several people about my experience with this excellent remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 35-2

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have tried with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

These Bad Pains which give you such exquisite suffering, every month, are caused, as you know, by female trouble.

Relief seldom or never comes of itself. It is necessary to cure the cause, in order to stop the pains, and this can only be done if you will take a specific, female remedy, that acts directly on the womanly organs.

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMAN'S RELIEF

"Cardui did wonders for me," writes Mrs. H. C. Larson, of Olds, Ia. "I had female trouble for 8 years. I had displacement, which increased my suffering, the doctor could only relieve me at times. Now, I am so much better, I hardly know when my time begins or when it ends."

Nervous Prostration

"I suffered so with Nervous Prostration that I thought there was no use trying to get well. A friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine, and although skeptical at first, I soon found myself recovering, and am to-day well."

MRS. D. I. JONES,
5800 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

"I saw Wilbur Wright fly at Le Mans last month," said a Chicagoan. "It was great. Afterwards I had the pleasure of lunching with Mr. Wright and Leon Bollee, the motor builder who is one of his most ardent supporters. We talked at luncheon about flying, high flying. Then, by a quite natural transition, we talked about gambling, that other form of high flight. Mr. Wright, like Sir Hiram Maxim, takes a great interest in Monte Carlo. But he, like Sir Hiram, believes that it is impossible at Monte Carlo to beat the game.

"'No,' he said, 'the rules are too unfair to the player. With unlimited capital, with unlimited coolness, with the best of systems, the Monte Carlo plunger will end no better off than the man who put the placard on the wall. A tremendous wall, you know, supports the Monte Carlo terrace that overlooks the sea. Well, last winter, some joker put on this wall a placard that said:

We understand Mr. Coss will move to Chicago and we wish him success. He has a fine wife.

The following article is taken from a Boon, Iowa, paper. Mr. Griest moved from Butler to Iowa: A lot of new machinery is being installed in the Model laundry at 926 Eighth street and in a short time it will be installed in place of the present machines. There are new domestic machines, three new ironers and all the other necessary apparatus to be used in a modern laundry.

F. W. Swantusch and family arrived all o. k. from their trip of over 8,400 miles, Sept. 2, at 12:10 p. m. They returned from Seattle by the Canadian Pacific railroad, passing through the finest mountain scenery in North America. This assertion is made by the C. P. Ry. Co., going through Glacier, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw and Winnipeg, thence south to St. Paul. After leaving the mountains coming east on the C. P. railroad, the land is the same as we find going through Dakota, so very fine fields and rich soil, thin alkali and thin soil, some places great deal of swamp, then go through what they call bush, that is very light growth of trees. We found Winnipeg a nice clean, thriving, up-to-date, hustling city with wide streets. They have good street car service, but they have a novel way of collecting fare. The conductor comes around with a sort of can with slot in top and the passenger must place cash or ticket with same himself, so in this way the poor conductor is not tempted in handling the company's money and grafting is entirely done away with.

ONE important question about painting is: How many square feet will a gallon of paint cover? It depends on the condition of the building; and on the paint.

The common claim for paint is, 300 square feet to the gallon, two coats. As a rule with paints, this is not true.

Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint covers 300 to 500 square feet, so painters say. We think 300 not enough, and 500 too much, to claim for it; but both have been true.

Devoe is a safe name to go by in buying paint; it's all paint, and all good. Geo. W. Geddes, Agt.

EXPLODING THE MYTHS OF CAPTAIN KIDD

Actual Facts in the Legendary Career of the Scotchman Who Was Accused of Piracy and for Whose Fabulous Buried Treasure Adventurers Are Still Seeking.

The buried treasure of Capt. Kidd is one of the greatest myths of modern times. Kidd's gold has been sought for 200 years. The waters of bays, rivers and lagoons have been swept for the hulk of his sunken ship. Quest of the treasure of Capt. Kidd must always be in vain, for Kidd buried no treasure, says the Philadelphia Ledger.

Neither of the two vessels in which he cruised during his years of free roving was sunk, so there can be no sunken hulk of Capt. Kidd's laden with gold or otherwise.

The Adventure Galley, in which he began his cruises, was condemned as unseaworthy and burned at Madagascar. His other ship, the Quedah Merchant, was burned at Hispaniola (San Domingo) after Kidd's arrest in Boston. The sloop San Antonio, in which Kidd came north, was seized in Boston.

THE MANOR HOUSE ON GARDINER'S ISLAND.

Fanciful stories have been told of Kidd's visit to Gardiner's Island and his burial of treasure there. The only authentic account of his visit there is in the testimony of John Gardiner, given under oath at Boston about three weeks after Kidd's visit. It makes no mention of the treasure having been buried. An official abstract of Mr. Gardiner's testimony was as follows:

About 20 days ago Mr. Emott, of New York, came to his (Gardiner's) house and desired a boat to go to New York; furnished him one; that evening he (Gardiner) saw a sloop (the San Antonio, with six guns riding off (Gardiner's) Island; two days afterward in the evening Gardiner went on board the sloop to inquire what she was.

When he came on board Capt. Kidd till then unknown to him, asked him how himself and family did; said he was going to Lord Bellomont at Boston, and desired him to carry two negro boys and one negro girl ashore and keep them until he returned or his order called for them; about ten hours after he had taken the negroes, Kidd sent his boat ashore with two bales of goods and a negro boy.

Next morning Kidd desired Gardiner to come on board immediately and bring six sheep with him for his voyage to Boston, which he did; then Kidd desired him to spare a barrel of cider, which he consented to do. Gardiner sent two of his men for it, and while they were gone, Kidd offered Gardiner several pieces of damaged muslin and gengal as a present to his wife, which Kidd put in a bag and handed to him; about a quarter of an hour after, Kidd gave Gardiner two or three pieces of damaged muslin for his own use. An outline of the events that led to Kidd's being charged with piracy is necessary to an understanding of the situation in which he now found himself. For some years Kidd had been a shipmaster sailing out of New York, and for a time had commanded a privateer, cruising against the French in the West Indies. He was prosperous, and tradition places in his house in Liberty street the first Turkey carpet seen in New York. In 1695 fate ordained a change in the life of Capt. Kidd. In that year he was in London, commanding the brigantine Antigoa, of New York, when the King appointed Richard Coote, Earl of Bellomont, Governor of New England and New York. Bellomont was ambitious, and saw in the suppression of piracy, at which the Colonial Governors had been winking, a field for personal advancement and gain. Before leaving England he asked that an English frigate be sent to suppress the pirates, and not getting it he decided to fit out a privately owned ship. He cast about for a captain, and Robert Livingston, founder of the New York family of that name, who was then in London, recommended Capt. Kidd as the proper man. Kidd was disinclined to take the position, but Bellomont intimated that Kidd's own vessel would be detained in the Thames if he did not, and he yielded. For two years little was heard from the Adventure Galley, either in New York or London, but that little was bad. Ships brought stories that Kidd had turned pirate. One report was that he had taken a great ship, the Quedah Merchant, and had left his own ship to cruise as a pirate in her.

This was hard news for Capt. Kidd's wife, faithful and anxious in their New York home, waiting, with their two children, for his return. It disturbed Kidd's noble partners also though for a different reason. Kidd was compromising them. He was not careful enough. He must be dropped. So they sent warships to hunt him as a pirate. While his backers were anxiously waiting to hear of his capture Kidd appeared unexpectedly in the West Indies, where he touched at Anguilla April 1, 1699, heard that he was wanted as a pirate and now decided to find Bellomont and set himself straight if he could.

Capt. Kidd was prepared to swear to Bellomont that he was innocent of piracy; that he had taken only ships which sailed under French papers, and that whatever acts of a piratical nature he had committed were by his crew, who had mutinied, and locked him in his cabin until the piracies were accomplished. Kidd approached the land first in Delaware Bay, near Lewes, and sent ashore for supplies. He did not go ashore here, nor did he land any goods. A chest owned by James Gillam, a pirate, who was a passenger on Kidd's vessel from Madagascar, was landed here by its owner and placed in safe hands. Several people who sold Kidd supplies were on his vessel. They were later arrested and swore Kidd landed no goods.

Kidd's movements from this point on can be traced. He was anxious to communicate with his wife and friends in New York, and to that end he steered for Long Island Sound, entering it at the east end and proceeding as far as Oyster Bay. Here he went ashore and sent a messenger to New York with a letter to James Emott, a lawyer, and a message to his wife. Emott, whose practice embraced the defense of pirates, hurried to Oyster Bay and went on board Kidd's sloop, which sailed at once for Rhode Island. Here Emott was landded in Narragansett Bay, probably near Point Judith, to proceed to Boston, Lord Bellomont being there. Capt. Kidd's advocate arrived in Boston on June 13, 1699, and went at once to Bellomont's lodgings. Bellomont promised Kidd security "if he would prove himself as innocent as Emott said he was."

About June 25 Kidd headed for Boston, after taking on a pilot from Rhode Island—one Benjamin Bevins. This pilot naturally had charge of the sloop, and no treasure could have been landed without his knowledge. He was later a witness for the government. The San Antonio put in at Tarpaulin Cove, a convenient harbor on Vineyard Sound, and there Kidd landed "a bale and two barrels of goods," which were "left with the man there," to be called for on his return. The bale and barrels were duly recovered, like all the rest of Kidd's property. The value of the goods and treasure recovered from Kidd tallies fairly clearly with his probable share of the total booty of his voyage, less the goods left on the Quedah Merchant, which were sold by Bolton at St. Thomas. The exact nature of the treasure Kidd turned over to Mr. Gardiner is known from an inventory made by five commissioners sent by Massachusetts to collect Kidd's property. The original of this inventory still exists. The treasure left at Gardiner's Island was listed in it as follows:

	Ounces.
No. 1—One bag gold dust	60¾
No. 2—One bag coined gold	11
And in it silver	124
No. 3—One bag dust gold	24¾
No. 4—One bag, three silver rings and sundry precious stones	4⅞
One bag unpolished stones	4⅞
One pure crystal and brazer stones, two Cornelson rings, two small agates, two amethysts, all in the same bag.
No. 5—One bag silver buttons and a lamp	20
No. 6—One bag broken silver	173½
No. 7—One bag gold bars	353¼
No. 8—One bag gold bars	238½
No. 9—One bag dust gold	59½
No. 10—One bag silver bars	212
No. 11—One bag silver bars	309

Besides this treasure the commissioners seized on the San Antonio and at Mrs. Kidd's lodgings about as much more.

CENTENARY OF STEAMBOAT NAVIGATION ON THE ST. LAWRENCE

It is a happy coincidence that the year which witnessed the entrance of the White Star-Dominion Line Laurentic should also be the centenary year of the introduction of steam navigation on the St. Lawrence. The idea of applying steam power to the boats which a hundred years ago carried on the limited transportation between Montreal and Quebec originated with the late Hon. John Molson, whose name is perpetuated to-day in one of the banking institutions of Canada, which bears the family name. The "Accommodation" was the name of the Molson steamboat, and she was built on the bank of the St. Lawrence at Montreal in the summer of 1809, and the event was fraught with great importance to the trade of the country, greater by far probably, than the prime mover in its accomplishment even dared to imagine.

The steamboat "Accommodation," which ushered in such an epoch marking period in the history of Canada, was 75 feet long on the keel and 85 feet on deck. She had berths for twenty passengers which it was promised would be considerably augmented the following year. She received her impulse from an open double-spoked, perpendicular wheel on each side without any circular band or rim.

In the Old Days.

In the old days hardships innumerable presented themselves in the land journey, whilst dangers by day and by night stared the hardy voyageurs in the face when they made their journey between Quebec and Montreal. The heavy and swift flowing currents of the river made the upward journey very difficult, and many laborious detours had to be made to accomplish the journey.

To go on with the historical side of the narrative, it may be stated, the Montreal Star says, that with all its inconviences, the mode of travel introduced by Hon. John Molson was a success, for the following year we find him applying to the legislature of the Province of Quebec "for the exclusive right and privilege of constructing and navigating a steamboat or steamboats within the limits of the province for a space of fifteen years."

In 1812 he built another and larger steamer of 130 feet keel and 24 feet beam. The name of which vessel was "Swiftsure."

Following the "Swiftsure," Mr. Molson proceeded to carry out his idea of operating a fleet of river steamers, and the construction of each one led to improvements in matter of size and accommodation.

Up to about 1818 a great many people preferred to drive in caleches over rough roads between Montreal and Quebec, but by that time the service had been so greatly improved that the steamboats came into more general favor.

A few years afterwards attention was devoted to the building of powerful tug boats so that sailing vessels could be towed up the river against the current. At one time oxen were yoked up and driven to the river side, waiting to assist. In addition to the oxen there was one horse as leader.

This system prevailed up to the year 1832. At that period wharves did not exist; the boats drew up to the shore as close as possible and made fast to piles temporarily driven in the bank of the river.

The first records of accidents to steamboats in the St. Lawrence are those of the "Waterloo" and "John Bull." The former foundered in Lake St. Peter and was replaced by the "John Bull," a fine boat 190 feet long, which was burned in 1838. It was related of the latter boat that she earned more money while at anchor than while in operation. This arose out of the fact that she burned so much coal that she was unprofitable, but while at anchor was often used as the official residence of His Excellency the Governor-General, Lord Durham.

The third steamboat accident of which there is a record, was that of the "Montreal," which was lost in a snow storm near Batiscan in November, 1853.

First Iron Steamers.

The first iron steamers came into use on the St. Lawrence about 1843, the pioneers of that class being the "Prince Albert" and "Iron Duke," which were used as ferry boats between Montreal on the one side, and St. Lambert and Laprairie on the south shore. This was long before the Victoria Bridge was built, and passengers from the south by the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railway were landed on the south side and were conveyed across the river by these steamers. These boats were built in Scotland and brought out in sections, being put together in Montreal.

The year 1845 saw the advent of the Richelieu Steamboat Company, which was destined to play an important part in St. Lawrence navigation in after years, much larger than the originators of the service ever dreamed. From the modest beginning of running some market boats to Sorel to enable farmers to market their produce in Montreal, the company has by steady growth and amalgamation with other companies, developed into one with assets exceeding $4,000,000 to its credit, and operating steamers of all sizes, through and local, from Lake Ontario to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

SPAIN'S REVOLUTION—A SCENE OF WRECKAGE.

A TRAMWAY CAR OVERTURNED BY THE RIOTERS.

During the recent revolution in Spain the tramway system of Barcelona was attacked by the rioters at many points, the track being destroyed and cars overturned and burnt. In the fighting and rioting women and children took a conspicuous part, for the rioters when confronted with troops placed the children in the front line, the women in the second, and the men themselves formed a third. Under cover of the women and children the men attacked the police or soldiers, who were unable to discharge their rifles against defenceless women and children.

WOMAN HELD AT SNAKE'S MERCY

From one danger into another was Mrs. Lydia Smith's predicament, when, in trying to escape a snake, she caught her hair in a wire fence and badly lacerated her scalp before she could be extricated. Mrs. Smith, who lives in Clayton, Del., while on an outing at Rehobeth, went to a small henhouse in the back yard to catch a chicken for dinner. As she entered the wire inclosed yard she found a large blackenake lying at her feet. The frightened woman jumped back, catching her hair in the wire netting overhead, while the frightened snake glided out the other way. Mrs. Smith's head was badly torn, some of the hair being pulled out by the roots.

DIRECTING THE CENSUS

The Director of the Census is Edwin Dana Durand, a Michigan man, born in 1871. For two years he was legislative librarian of the New York State Library. For another year he was assistant professor of administration and finance at Stanford University. From 1900 until 1902 he was secretary of the industrial commission, and for a short time before going to the census bureau as special expert he was instructor of economics at Harvard.

The history of census taking in this country may be divided into three periods, determined by fundamental acts of Congress. The first of these extends from 1790 until 1850. During this period the Department of State had charge of the work, while United States marshals and their assistants supervised and collected the data. In the second period, extending from 1850 until the law of 1902 was passed, the Department of the Interior had charge of the work. The laws of 1902 and 1903 providing for the permanent organization and changing the bureau from the Interior Department to that of Commerce and Labor mark the beginning of the present epoch.

As early as 1810 an attempt to include in the census information pertaining to manufactures of this country was made, though it met with little success. The act of 1850 increased the objects of inquiry to include mines, manufactures and agriculture, and with each succeeding decade the scope of inquiry has been enlarged until the mass of information has become too heavy to handle with ease, and much of it is out of date before it is put into available shape. The eleventh census was not published until seven years after it was begun. The census of 1880 appeared in 1889. For each enormous sums of money are spent, thousands of clerks are employed, tons of literature distributed.

The four principal reports of the census of 1900, those on population, agriculture, manufacturing and vital statistics, filled ten quarto volumes, 10,000 pages of printed matter, and with the special reports sustained the claim that in the matter of census taking the United States leads in scope of inquiry, combinations of facts and costs incurred.

TURKEY GETS REVENGE FOR TEASING 7 YEARS AGO.

Does a turkey gobbler possess the same remarkable mental faculties as does the elephant? A turkey on the farm of Amos Hollister, near Benton, Wash., was teased into anger over seven years ago by a little girl with yellow curls. The other day the same little girl, now grown into womanhood, wearing the dresses of the day's style, appeared upon the lawn of the same farm and was attacked by a gobbler enraged beyond all turkey sense, and continued the fight until he was subdued and placed in a pen. Over seven years ago Miss Elsie Gunther visited the farm of her uncle and teased the gobbler with a cane which had ribbons tied to it. The turkey chased her around the barnyard.

The incident was forgotten and school work and business kept the niece from again visiting her uncle until seven years had passed. Miss Gunther, free from school duties and languishing for the free air of the country, went to the Benton farm last week. The first thing she did was to trip across the barnyard toward the cow pens as she had done years ago. Before she was across the lawn a big turkey gobbler, the same one which attacked her seven years ago, flew at her face and sturck her a blow that almost threw her into a heap. The turkey continued his attack until Hollister captured and imprisoned him.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles, causing backache, irregularities, dizziness and nervous prostration. BABY HORRIBLY BURNED

By Boiling Grease—Skin All Came Off One Side of Face and Head—Thought Her Disfigured for Life—Used Cuticura—No Scar Left.

"My baby was sitting beside the fender and we were preparing the breakfast when the frying-pan full of boiling grease was upset and it went all over one side of her face and head. Some one wiped the scald with a towel, pulling the entire skin off. We took her to a doctor. He tended her a week and gave me some stuff to put on. But it all festered and I thought the baby was disfigured for life. I used about three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and it was wonderful how it healed. In about five weeks it was better and there wasn't a mark to tell where the scald had been. Her skin is just like velvet. Mrs. Hare, 1, Henry St., South Shields, Durham, Eng., March 22, 1908."

IRISH AHEAD OF COLUMBUS.

Proofs of Celtic Invasion of America in First Century.

In a book about to be published here the well-known tradition of a pre-Columbus Irish settlement in America receives startling support, a London dispatch printed in the Detroit Free Press says. With the discovery of certain Arabian and Scandinavian maps in the Casanatensis library in Rome the habitation of America by the Celts before Columbus arrived is established beyond question.

The fact that the finder of this interesting information is a woman and the only one of her sex to be appointed by the Pope to assist the commission for the revision of the vulgate only serves to intensify the general interest in the work she is about to lay before the public.

Mrs. Marion Mullhall, author of "The Celtic Sources of the Divina Comedia" and numerous other works, is the discoverer of the hitherto only fabled account of an early invasion of America by the Irish.

The maps she uncovered among the musty archives of the Casanatensis library are of unquestioned authenticity and show that not only did the Irish establish a Christian colony in America in the first century of Christianity, but they gave the name of their native land to that part of the country which they occupied.

Elsewhere in the book, which bears the title "Explorers in the New World Before and After Columbus," are chapters on navigators of the sixteenth century, Irish commanders in Chili and Peru, Hiberno-Spanish notables and various episodes and personalities connected with the romantic conquest of South America. The book omits no important name or event and for the first time gives their due meed to the Irish soldiers and statesmen who have borne such a notable part in South American history.

The concluding chapter deals with the rise and fall of the Jesuit mission in Paraguay.

Mrs. Mullhall, who enjoys the signal honor of being the only woman of any nationality to have received the Pope's unique commendation, is one of Ireland's most distinguished women. By his recognition of her genius for research the holy father has conferred a well-merited honor, so her countrymen declare, on one of the most gifted women of the day. Mrs. Mullhall is the widow of the late Dr. Micheal Mullhall, famous as a statistician.

SENSE ABOUT FOOD.

Facts About Food Worth Knowing.

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was put under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he has none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash rom wheat and barley which combines with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centres.

It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Cultivation of Corn.

At the several experiment stations corn has received more than its share of attention, and many experiments have been made in order to learn how to derive the largest yields and to grow the crop most economically. Opinions differ, however, as climate, variety and soil are factors governing every crop. The Indiana station found that the best results were obtained by planting seed in May. It has been shown that the greatest average yield of both ears and stocks have been obtained when the stalks stood about twelve or fourteen inches apart in the rows. Thick planting, however, reduces the size of the ears, and the percentage of grain, but thick planting has, in dry seasons, produced the heaviest yield of stalks and the highest yield of ears. So far as depth of cultivation is concerned, the yields, when corn was cultivated one, two and three inches, have been equal. In continuous corn culture heavy applications of fresh horse manure have not been profitable, but the effect of a very heavy application of manure has been noticed for many years. There does not seem to be much difference in yields due to any particular implement used, while hill and drill plantings of corn have produced the same average yields. The "checking" of corn is still the most popular and profitable mode of growing the corn at the least cost of labor. The results at one station may not correspond with those obtained elsewhere, but where the work has extended over a number of years the results should be accepted as important, if not conclusive.

Cooling Cream.

Different conditions on the farm will govern arrangements for the cooling of cream. Where windmills are used, many farms have cheaply constructed milk-houses in which can be placed a tank or half barrel, through which all water is led from the windmill to the stock-watering tanks. With the cream cooled and held in these tanks the arrangement is everything required.

Where windmills and milkhouses are not used, a half barrel can be set near the pump and a cheap shade constructed. The water can be pumped by hand with small expenditure of time and labor. The cooling of the cream will heat the water. Run out the warm water and pump a fresh supply in which the cream can set over night or through the day before being added to the supply can. When another lot of warm cream is to be cooled, the operation can be repeated. A large box can be set over the barrel to protect the cream from the sun. The farmer's ingenuity may suggest some other protection equally as good.

There are a dozen or more arrangements, inexpensively and easily made, which can be devised on every farm for the proper care of cream. These remarks suggest only the principle of keeping the cream in good condition.

A Yard Scraper.

Besides its use in the barnyard, this is handy for covering potatoes, leveling rough ground, filling ditches, etc. It should be made of 2-inch lumber and hard wood if possible; the scraper should be 6 to 8 feet long, and 2 feet high; its life will be prolonged if shod with a piece of iron or steel, as shown; moreover, it will do good work without the iron. The evener must be at least 4 feet from scraper, to allow for load, and to keep same from under the horses feet. A very large barnyard may be cleaned in a short time, and several loads of manure saved. Simply drive the load where wanted, lift scraper up by the handles, leaving load, and repeat the operation.

Growing Bush Beans.

Bush or dwarf beans are easy to grow and are one of the best and most popular of garden vegetables. A succession of them should be planted and be coming on from the very earliest summer till after the first frosts of autumn. Beans of all kinds are somewhat tender and are easily killed by late spring frosts, yet they are easily and cheaply planted and risk should be taken in planting extra early. If the first crop happens to be caught by frost, it is a very easy matter to plant the same space over again and little will be lost by the trial, as one preparation of the soil will serve for a succession of crops.

For bush beans prepare the ground early in a dry condition, working it down to a very fine and even seed bed. Make the surface soil especially fine and loose, since the bean sometimes has difficulty in coming up in three or four days. Give the young plants clean and light surface cultivation to conserve soil moisture. A three or four-shoveled horse cultivator may be used, but never in them while the vines are in the least wet or moist, as this will bring on disease. Plant a succession, about three weeks apart, up to the last of August in central latitudes. Pick the beans clean while they are green regularly and the vines will bear longer. If beans are allowed to ripen on the vines the vines will soon die.

Electric Agriculture.

William Low of Scotland will experiment on a large scale with the application of electricity to agriculture. About twenty-three acres, divided in a number of fields, will be utilized for this purpose, each field including a nonelectrified or controlled plot for the purpose of comparison. A network of wires will be run over the fields at a height of about 16 feet from the ground. The poles will be put 200 feet apart one way and 300 feet another way. By means of transformers the voltage for the network will be raised to 100,000.

Treating Horse Corns.

Dr. A. A. Holcombe, inspector of the United States bureau of animal husbandry, says of treating horse corns: "As in all other troubles, the cause must be discovered if possible and removed. In a great majority of cases the shoeing will be at fault. For a sound foot, perfectly formed, a flat shoe with heels less thick than the toe and which rests evenly on the wall proper is the best. In flat feet it is often necessary to concave the feet as much as possible on the upper surface so that the sole may not be pressed upon. If the heels are very low the heels of the shoe may be made much thicker. If the foot is very broad and the wall light toward the heels a far shoe, resting upon the walls, may aid to prevent excessive tension upon the soft tissues when the foot receives the weight of the body. A piece of leather placed between the foot and shoe serves largely to destroy concussion, and its use is absolutely necessary on some animals to enable them to work. Among the preventive measures may be mentioned those which serve to maintain the suppleness of the hoof. The dead horn upon the surface of the sole not only retains moisture for a long time, but protects the living horn beneath from the effects of evaporation. For this reason the sole should be pared as little as possible.

HORSE CORNS.

Milk Contamination.

There are a hundred and one places where milk can be contaminated from the time it is drawn from the udder till it reaches the table in the form of sweet milk, cream or butter. First, a great deal of bacteria, impurities and disease germs get into the milk at the barn or lot in which the cows are kept. Second, a great many more of these owe their existence in milk to the attendant and the place in which the milk is kept. The moment the cow shows signs of being ill, or when even a slight eruption is noticeable, a person may contract disease by partaking of her milk. Impure water is another way in which milk is contaminated. If the cow is compelled to drink out of a mud hole, filled with disease germs, she cannot help but drink a large number of those germs into her system, some of them being sure to reach her milk. Milking the cow into an open pail when the barn is filled with dust, and from which there hangs an untold number of dirty cobwebs, or milking her in a offensively smelling lot, where the filth is ankle deep, or milking a cow whose udder, flanks and legs are covered with dirt and filth—in such cases it is impossible to avoid contamination of the milk. It is believed that more disease germs are given the human family through milk than are given in any other agency; and we also believe that less attention is paid to the care of milk than to any other food consumed upon the table.

When Haying Is Done.

There's a smile of relief and a spirit of fun
Comes over the farmer when haying is done;
With his hayloft's all swelling with sweet-scented hay
His smile is as cheery as sunshine in May.
The summer's half over, and out in the field
He sees the approach of a bountiful yield;
As tall as his hat is the golden-topped corn,
Which waves its long arms in the breeze of the morn,
As fair and as fragrant as gardens of old
Are his fields with their stubble as yellow as gold.

With his barn full of hay and his bedding stacked high,
A smile on his face and a gleam in his eye;
The cattle provided with winter repast,
While apples and pumpkins are ripening fast.
There's a smile of relief and a spirit of fun
Comes over the farmer when haying is done;
The turnips are growing, the melons are prime,
The harvest approaching, his bounteous time.
Ah! Lucky the farmer who wanders afield
And sees the approach of a beautiful yield!

Scours in Calves.

A stockman claims that when calves 3 or 4 years old become sick and die with scours it is due to indigestion, apparently, and yields to treatment with pepsin if taken in time. A teaspoonful twice a day given in a little warm milk after feeding will cure it, and if given when the calf is born and continued for a few days, will prevent it. The pepsin is the common kind sold in drug stores, and can be purchased by the pound.

Lack of Water Lessens Milk Flow.

Don't let the cows shift for themselves in the matter of water. They must have all they want of such a temperature as will induce them to drink enough to supply their needs. Many a cow "falls down" in her milk production because she is starving for water, the water being either difficult of access or too cold to be palatable.

The Asparagus Butts.

The best remedy is to cut the shoots as soon as they appear above ground, as the beetle attacks the tips. Many persons prefer the green tops of asparagus, but the best stalks are those cut when the tips are white, as they are the tender from tip to butt.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Succotash.

Take one dozen ears of uncooked corn, scraped. Boil until well done a pint of shelled young Lima beans. Add these to the corn, with a teacup of the liquor with which the beans were cooked. Season with a tablespoonful of butter, and pepper to taste. Place on the top of the stove. Allow the succotash to boil up twice. By then the corn will be sufficiently cooked and ready to serve.

Old-Fashioned Waffles.

A quart of flour with enough milk to form a stiff batter. Stir in a tablespoonful of melted butter, a teaspoonful of salt, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and beat to a cream. When quite light add two well-beaten eggs and bake in hot greased waffle irons. The second batch of waffles is usually better than the first, because the irons have had time to become uniformly heated.

Frozen Cream Cheese.

Beat one-half pound of cream cheese to a cream, and add a quarter of a teaspoon of salt, one-half teaspoon of paprika, one teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, one of lemon juice and one-half pint of whipped cream. Freeze in a freezer, the same as you do ice cream. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves with a teaspoonful of currant jelly on each.

Cornmeal Kisses.

Stir into a pint of corn meal a teaspoonful of salt, and scald with boiling water. Beat quickly and drop from a spoon into a little boiling lard on a very hot griddle, and cook on top of the stove, or drop upon greased letter paper and bake inside. The kisses should be very small, and should cook quickly until brown.

Fig Ice Cream.

Soak two pounds of figs over night. Put through a meat chopper, just cover with water and bring to a boil. One quart of milk, one pint of cream, one and one-half cups of sugar, brought to the boiling point. Add to the figs, cool, add two teaspoons of vanilla and freeze.

Baked Tomatoes.

Take twelve even-sized tomatoes, wash, take out core, put in a dripping pan, sprinkle on each a saltspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper; bake about twenty minutes in a very hot oven, serve on a hot platter, tomatoes to be buttered as eaten. Very inexpensive and palatable.

Corn Omelet.

Six eggs, beaten lightly; dash of pepper; three tablespoonfuls of cream; fry as usual. When about half done put in a cupful of heated and seasoned sweet corn. When done, turn out on a hot platter, sprinkle with a teaspoonful of salt, and serve immediately.

Frozen Peaches.

Two quarts of peaches, one quart of water and three cups of sugar. Pare, stone and mash the peaches. Add six broken peach kernels to the sugar and water and boil five minutes. Strain, and when cool add to the peaches and freeze.

Muffins.

Rub a tablespoonful of butter into a tablespoonful of sugar, add a well-beaten egg, a cup of sweet milk, a pinch of salt and 1½ cups of flour sifted with two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in muffin tins in a hot oven.

Chicken en Casserole.

Cut up a yearold chicken and bake in covered casserole with milk or milk and water enough to cover chicken. Season with salt, pepper, parsley and a little onion when two-thirds done.

To Cut Brown Bread.

Remove hot brown bread from cans and with a common wrapping twine cut the bread.

Helpful Hints.

A cloth moistened with alcohol will clean piano keys.

Clean linoleum with warm water and polish it with milk.

To clean marble take two parts of soda, one of pumice and one of salt, all in powder, and mix to a paste with water.

Fat which is to be kept should be cut up small and boiled in a saucepan in a little water and never put into the oven to melt.

A simple sirup that is good to serve on hot waffles is made by boiling water and sugar together and adding cinnamon to taste.

Cover plaster-of-paris figures with a thick coating of starch and water, let it dry on the surface and the dirt will brush off with the dry powder.

In papering a room, remember that large patterns and dark colors will make it appear smaller, while a plain or striped paper, if a light hue, will give an impression of increased size.

Ink stains on silver or plated articles may be removed with a paste made of chloride of lime and water. This should be left on for a little while, and then washed off in warm water.

Milk jars in which the milk has soured can be most quickly cleaned by putting first under the cold water spigot, then filling with hot water in which has been dissolved a liberal amount of washing soda.

To save many steps in the kitchen have a small zinc-covered shelf near the range, where hot food, when removed from the oven, may be placed. It also saves the table and you avoid the danger of being burned while carrying it across a room.

Remember that the skins of peaches may be removed as those of tomatoes are by plunging them into boiling—not merely hot—water. This way of peeling is a great saving in the fruit. Oranges plunged in boiling water will always peel more easily than when not so treated.

Famous House Sold.

The House of Seven Gables in Salem, around which Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote one of his best known stories and which is visited annually by thousands, has been sold to Mrs. George R. Emmerton, who is to use the place for settlement work. The structure was built in 1662 and originally had seven gables. In remodeling some forty years ago most of these gables were removed, but the places where the seven gable windows were are easily discernible to-day on the inside.

If your back aches and you feel sick, languid, weak and miserable day after day—don't worry. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women in the same condition.

Mrs. A. Helman of Stillwater, Minn., says: "But for Doan's Kidney Pills I would not be living now. They cured me in 1899 and I've been well since. I used to have such pain in my back and once I fainted. The kidney secretions were much disordered and I was so far gone that I was thought to be at death's door. Since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me I feel as if I had been pulled back from the tomb."

Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Separating Them.

Mr. Grubb, an elderly bachelor, having been troubled for a week or two with a pain in his back, went to his doctor. The physician, who was just starting to see a patient, prescribed two large porous plasters, and told him to call again in about a fortnight and report.

Mr. Grubb complied with directions. He went to a drug store and bought the plasters, and after a prolonged struggle with them in his own room succeeded in getting them properly in place. Being a very small man, however, the two nearly covered his whole back. At the end of two weeks he called at the physician's office again.

"Well, how is your back?" asked the medical man.

"Sound as a dollar. Hasn't pained me any for ten days or more."

"Glad to hear it. You may take the plasters whenever you please."

"Not much!" exclaimed Mr. Grubb, removing his coat and vest, taking off his collar and locking the door of the doctor's office. "I won't touch 'em. They're bigger than I am. What I want you to do now, doctor, is to pull me off the plasters."

His Only Regrets.

Life is real if not altogether earnest among people of a type recently mentioned in the Washington Star.

"I s'pose John is still taking life easy?" said the woman in the spring wagon on the road to Alexandria.

"Yes," answered the woman who was carrying an armful of wood. "John has only two regrets in life. One is that he has to wake up to eat, and the other that he has to quit eating to sleep."

RUSSIAN'S ODD WAGER.

The Eight Different Methods of Locomotion by Which He Won.

A man named Duhoroff has just won a highly original wager at Kief, says the St. Petersburg correspondence of the London Evening Standard. He had undertaken to appear daily during eight days in the streets employing each time a different mode of locomotion.

He commenced by running down the steps of his dwelling and along the boulevard on his hands. The following day he hopped through the town on one leg.

Stilts, a skipping rope, roller skates and a bath chair all followed in turn. One day he was conducted through the principal thoroughfares by a small boy who led him on a string.

The finest of his exploits was undoubtedly a recent performance, when, turning successive somersaults in the air for nearly a mile, he arrived amid enthusiastic cheers at the cafe where his friends were waiting to bestow the prize upon him.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit. Ingredients printed on wrapper.

Keeping Up the Same Old "Gate"

It's the flavor that set the gait for the imitators—It's still bars them, and keeps Kellogg's in a field by itself. No one has been able to even approach it in either taste or tender crispness. There's a good reason for this. The same flavor that

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION

Chicago's Big Show Breaks All World's Fair Records in Attendance and Splendor.

All world's records in attendance have been broken by Riverview Exposition, Chicago's latest and greatest show.

Although the turning point of one-half the season has not yet arrived more than 5,000,000 persons have passed through the turnstiles. Before the season ends it is estimated 10,000,000 will have revelled in the mystery, splendor and delights of this magnificent exhibition. Allowing the big city on the lake one-half of the past attendance there remain 2,500,000 out-of-town visitors—more than ever visited any other world's fair in any country.

Col. William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill", and Pawnee Bill, with their "Congress of Nations," recently celebrated the birthday anniversary of the veteran scout on the Exposition grounds.

The accompanying picture of the renowned plainsman was caught by a staff photographer. The two pretty "trompeters," mounted on elephants also got within range of the camera. These and six other young women with silver-toned trumpets and their intelligent big mounts which blew great blasts on bell-like trombones were an octette that rang rare melody throughout the Expo forests.

The grandeur and spectacular beauty of the Exposition is typified by a night scene of the entrance of "Creation" building.

The beautiful facade of "Creation," with its Titanic "Guardian Angel" gleams with thousands of vari-colored lights. Over the main arch is an iridescent glow of rainbow brilliance, the source of which the uninitiated cannot discover. The marbled edifice with its opalescent festoons, flashes and falls of illuminant beauty is reflected in a crystal lake, out of which spouts prismatic sprays and fountains of cooling mists. Cascades rush downward from aerial heights above the angel into the foaming waters.

The reverential dramas, "Creation," "Doomsday" or the "End of the World," another great exhibit; "The Passion Play" or "Life of Christ," and "The Temptation of St. Anthony," produced on a grand scale, are but three of the thousands of extraordinary attractions in the buildings of this wonderful exposition. All car lines in Chicago lead to its gates.

So they will put in switches just east of the river bridge until they can get the steel for the bridge. They have a gang of Pollocks working on the river fill. They have their boarding cars on the spur east of the Lewis hay barn.

A Carpet Filled with Gold.

The carpet on the floor of the adjusting room at the San Francisco mint is about worn out and a requisition has been sent to the Treasury Department for a new one. After the old covernig has been taken up it will be handled with far more care than the new one. It will be twenty times more valuable, because it is literally lined with gold.

The old carpet will be burned, and from the ashes the Treasury Department officials expect to extract anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000. In the adjusting room at San Francisco files are used to trim off $10 pieces. The gold is first run off into blanks and later stamped, so it frequently happens that a piece is overweight. Parts of the filing thus taken on filter on to the floor and become imbedded in the grain of the carpet. The very best carpets are purchased for this room, so that the closely woven material will scarcely hold the scattered bits of gold. It is nothing unusual for the authorities to get $5,000 worth of gold out of the ashes resulting from the burning of one of these carpets.

Other thrifty devices are resorted to in order to capture escaped particles of gold at the mints. The floor sweepings are treasured with the utmost care; they furnish enough money to pay the salary of the janitor several times over. Gold even goes up the chimney in smoke from the smelters. The chimneys are regularly scraped, and the resultant soot and dirt scanned for gold. Employes who handle bars of the yellow metal are not permitted to dispose of the aprons, overalls and gloves with which they are provided. These articles are all burned after they have outlived their usefulness, and yield a rich harvest.

For the next thirty days any one can secure the HERALD at $1.25 cash in advance. Now is the time to sign. The HERALD will be better than ever the coming year. All subscriptions discontinued at expiration if so desired by subscriber.

The court house appropriation no doubt will be acted on and there is likely to be much difference of opinion as to the necessity of a court house.

Last week supervisor Madden did a fine piece of grading on the Proctor road. It improves not only the road but also the farm lands adjoining it. Now if culberts are put in and the city of Butler will put in proper repair its portion of the mile of road it will be much appreciated by all who wish to use said road and a benefit to both town and countrp.

The Buck creek ditch fight is still in progress in Auburn and the indications of its end in the near future are not good. It is a bad affair in many respects and some of the promotors of it are not likely to live long enough to overcome the feeling against, caused, it is said, by misrepresenting certain and many things to the people, thus misleading them in many important matters.

IT TAKES COURAGE.

To speak the truth when, by a little prevarication, you can get some great advantage.

To live according to your convictions.

To be what you are and not pretend to be what you are not.

To live honestly within your means, and not dishonestly upon the means of others.

When mortified and embarrassed by humiliating disaster, to seek in the wreck or ruin the elements of future conquest.

To throw up a position with a good salary when it is the only business you know and you have a family depending upon you, because it does not have your unqualified approval.

To refuse to knuckle and bend the knee to the wealthy, even though poor.

To refuse to make a living in a questionable vocation.

To refuse to do a thing which you think is wrong, because it is customary, and done in trade.

To be talked about and yet remain silent when a word would justify you in the eyes of others, but which you cannot speak without injury to another.

To face slander and lies, and to carry yourself with cheerfulness, grace and dignity for years before the lie can be corrected.

To stand firmly erect while others are bowing and fawning for praise and power.

To remain in honest poverty while others grow rich by questionable methods.

To say "No" squarely when those around you say "Yes."

To do your duty in silence, obscurity and poverty, while others about you prosper through neglecting or violating sacred obligations.

Not to bend the knee to popular prejudice.—Success Magazine.

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

Free to You and Every Sister Suffering From Woman's Ailments.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER"—with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cured themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always results from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to hereby express our sincere thanks to the neighbors and friends who so kindly rendered their services during the death and burial of our aunt, Mrs. Sarah Casey. We especially wish to to thank the choir for their kindness in the service.

THE FRIENDS.

"A Woman of Mystery."

What is instinct? The smallest and most insignificant animal or insect is supplied witht a certain form of defense from harm, and that defense is principally what most people entirely ignore, and that defense is instinct. Judgement may be fooled, but instinct is never fooled. If you let your instinct hold sway in place of your judgment, it will invariably bring happiness and avoid business troubels as well as bring on happy marriages. Judgement at its best is merely a guess, while instinct is an absolute truth. It was instinct that brought on the passionate love between Aychea and Morrel and judgement that separated them. This will be fully illustrated when A Woman of Mystery with Miss Courtenay Morgan in the role of Aychea is presented at the Thompson Opera House on October 5.

Announcement

To the citizens and voters of the first ward of the city of Butler:

I am pleased to say that I am a candidate for your councilman and by the generous assistance of my friends I am entitled to a place on your ticket as an independent party or candidate, and no man from either party will have any cause to regret voting for me at this election. I have always tried to give the people a square deal and at all time trying to elevate the standard and efficiency of our city government, and if elected will faithfully and impartially perform every duty of this office.

Yours Respectfully,
THURLOW A. HOFFMAN.

Wedding Bells

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Swinehart, on West Oak street, last Saturday evening, in which their daughter, Miss May, was united in matrimony to Mr. Jesse Wagner, both of this city.

The home was nicely decorated in pink and white, the scheme being particularly pretty in the dining room where was set the bride's table which fairly blushed in its pink and white beauty over the snowy bridal cake that arose majestically in the center.

At eight o'clock, Rev. Parker of the United Brethren church, made the happy couple one, the bride being tastily clad in an old rose gown and the groom in conventional black. After congratulations a fine three course supper was served to about seventy-five guests, after which the usual "bellers" commenced a commotion which was immediately quelled by the generous groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Wagner were the recipients of many very pretty and useful presents which will adorn the new home on West Railroad street. This worthy young couple have the best wishes of all their friends for a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Those from a distance who were in attendance were as follows:

Jesse Brandeberry and Miss Lizzie Campbell, of Angola
Mrs. Tillie Miller, of Fort Wayne.
Robert Swinehart and mother, of Hamilton.
Burrel Erwin and family, of Ashley.
Byron Bryant and family, of Auburn.

Church of Christ Items

At the county meeting at St. Joe this week it was decided to make the meetings bi monthly, also to hold the meetings each evening of the week instead of for one day as in the past.

The newly remodeled Church of Christ at Hamilton will be rededicated next Sunday. L Conch is the new minister. L L. Carpenter, the veteran dedicator, will have charge of the services of the day.

The Memorial Centennial program of 208 pages bound in full leather with gold edges together with the souvenir badge of solid bronze, oxidized, are ready for distribution. These will be memorials of a hundred years past and heirlooms of a hundred years to come. Those desiring either can be supplied by making the matter known to the minister.

We were glad to observe that there were many additions to the "On Time Brigade" last Lord's day at Bible school. We look for more.

Lord's day services at the usual hours of worship. The general theme of the day will be "The Ordinances of the Church." Morning—"The Lord's Supper." Evening—"Christian Baptism." Special music. A cordial welcome to all.

We oftimes blame the idle rich for the self-centred spirit they betray; and we condemn the idle poor because of their uselessness in promoting the general welfare of society, but we seldom stop to think how really selfish we are ourselves.

S. B. BRADEN, Minister.

Notice

The report has been circulated that I am not in favor of city improvements. As candidate for councilman from first ward on the democrat ticket I wish to say that I am for city improvements, and those who cast their vote for me on Nov. 2, will have nothing to regret. I am under no obligations to any man or set of men and have no ax to grind, and if elected will give the people an honest deal to the very best of my ability.

M. F. CREAGER.

THE RISE OF THE GOOBER

PICKING THE NUTS FROM THE VINES

FROM humbleness to greatness, from insignificance to one of the most prominent places among the food products of the world, from vulgarity as the dietetic extravagance of the masses to the position of a table delicacy for the classes. That is the history of the peanut in the past fifty years.

The possibilities of the peanut as a wealth producer seem not to have been realized until recently. And even now, notwithstanding an immense increase in the acreage devoted to the crop, they are being incompletely utilized, so that the Department of Agriculture is about to issue a special bulletin calling attention to the chances for making money by raising the "goober."

A very striking feature of the document in question is the showing it makes of the many new uses to which peanuts are being put nowadays. They form an important ingredient in the vegetarian "meats" which are much more widely consumed than most people imagine. Some of these "meats," by the way, are made to imitate breaded lamb chops, with sticks of macaroni for bones. Peanuts are employed largely in the confectionery trade, and enter into the composition of many fancy cakes, such as macaroons, as a substitute for almonds. Peanut butter (likewise much affected by the vegetarians) is manufactured by the ton, and, put up in neat packages, is greatly esteemed for automomile lunches.

Now that the pestiferous boll weevil is ruining the cotton over such wide areas in the South, many planters are turning their attention to peanuts as a money crop. Although $12,000,000 worth of "goobers" were raised in this country last year, the supply is still not nearly equal to the demand—a condition sufficiently proved by the fact that we are importing great quantities of peanut oil from Europe. Thus, too, although there are tens of thousands of acres of waste lands in the Southern States which are only waiting to be tickled with a hoe in a proper manner in order to yield enough peanuts to furnish all the oil we want, plus a liberal supply for export.

Before the civil war there were practically no peanuts eaten in America, except by the negroes and the whites of the same social grade. Now more than 300,000,000 pounds of the nuts are consumed here annually. Fifty years ago nobody thought of raising peanuts for profit, and the few that were grown were either in the "gyarden patches" of the slaves or as curiosities in the experimental gardens of scientists. Now there are nearly 500,000 acres in the United States that are planted to peanuts, and 200,000 persons make their living as "hands" in the peanut fields, to say nothing of the other people employed in the "factories" where the nuts are cleaned and prepared for market.

No food product known, say statisticians, has had such a remarkable and such a rapid rise as the peanut. Nothing has sprung into popularity so quickly and so completely, and in the face of such an accumulation of preconceived prejudice, and there are few crops grown at the present time in any part of the world that yield better returns for the money and labor invested than the peanut crop of the United States.

The reason for it all is that during the civil war, when food was scarce, some hungry Confederate soldiers raided the "gyarden patch" of an old negro down in Virginia, and, for lack of anything better, confiscated all his peanuts. They found the peanuts were good to the taste and satisfying. They also discovered that the peanut made excellent food for horses. They wondered why they had never discovered these facts before, and, in thinking the matter over, they remembered how fond the negroes had always been of the little "ground peas," as they are often called even yet in Virginia, and how fat the little pickaninnies always were when the peanuts were bing picked. When the war was over and these soldiers went home to their battle-wasted plantations and began looking round for a way to bring a living out of the barrenness which they found, some of them thought of the peanuts. They borrowed some seed nuts from the negroes and planted their fields to peanuts, and without any knowledge of how to raise the crop, and little available labor for cultivating it, they succeeded in making a good crop the first year.

That was the beginning. Peanuts have been valuable as a marketable commodity in America from that time. At first only the common people used the nuts, but there happened to be enough of that class of society to make peanut raising profitable from the start, and since then common sense and experimentation upon the nuts as an article of food have gradually broken down the prejudice against them. Now everybody eats peanuts, the small boy at the circus and the epicure in his home, and man and beast alike are benefited by the many uses to which the humble, and for so long despised, little nut has been put.

Many people are surprised when they learn how many things are made from the peanut, and how many ways the little nuts themselves are eaten. Everybody is familiar with the "fresh-roasted" of the corner stand, and the automatic whistle, and with peanut candy of all kinds, and some kinds that are not supposed to be peanuts, such as nougat and "burnt almonds." The recent popular confection known as salted peanuts is another way in which 300,000,000 pounds of peanuts which this country alone produces every year are consumed. Then there are all the so-called health foods—peanut butter, peanut flour, from which bread and pastry of all kinds are made, peanut "coffee" and "cocoa," peanut meal, which forms the foundation for patties and croquettes, and vegetarian "meat" rolls, and, lastly, peanut oil. If nothing else could be made from the peanut, it would still be a very profitable crop, for shelled peanuts yield from 38 to 42 per cent of oil, and peanut oil has so many uses that the manufacture of it is fast becoming a more important industry than the making of olive oil.

The peanut vine or straw from which the nuts have been removed is of considerable value for the feeding of live stock. The ash from the shells used in the factory as fuel is valuable as a fertilizer, containing as much as 3 per cent of phosphoric acid, 9 per cent of potash and 6 per cent of lime. The thin brown envelopes of the peas have a feeding value almost equal to that of wheat bran.

The cultivation of peanuts was until recently confined almost wholly to areas in Virginia, Tennessee, the Carolinas and Georgia, but during the last ten years it has spread throughout the South Atlantic States, and even as far west as California.

The peanut plant, like the bean and the garden pea, has the power of collecting nitrogen from the atmosphere and storing it in little nodules upon its roots. For this reason it is one of the most desirable of soil-renovating and soil-improving plants. It is necessary, however, with a view to this end, that the main portion of the roots shall be left in the ground. If this be done, the nitrogen accumulated in a season by the means described will have a fertilizing value of $3 or $4 an acre.

Peanuts give an average yield of thirty-four bushels to the acre, but it is believed by government experts that the output can be increased to fifty or even sixty bushels by selecting superior seed from season to season.

MANY MILLIONS LOST BY PESTS ON FARMS

Injurious Mammals and Insects Cost $789,000,000 Every Year.

NATION IS SEEKING REMEDY.

Magnitude of the Work of Agriculture Department in Extermination of Destroyer.

In the message of President Roosevelt, transmitting a report of the National Conservation Commission, which was sent to Congress last January, appears the astounding statement that "the losses to farm products due to injurious mammals is estimated at $130,000,000 annually, and the loss through insects is reckoned at $659,000,000 annually."

These statements are confirmed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the scientists of that department who have charge of such matters. It is asserted that the prairie dogs in the State of Texas alone eat as much grass every year as would feed a million and a half of cattle. There are estimated to be 400,000,000 prairie dogs in Texas, an average of twenty-five to the acre and 200 dogs will eat as much grass as a steer. Besides this, the value of the land is very much injured by the dogs, because they dig up the roots of the grass and destroy it. Then, when they have cleaned out all the vegetation in their neighborhood, they migrate to another section and continue their work of destruction. The result is that entire townships of land have been made barren by their ravages. Texas, Kansas, Colorado and other Western states have been working for years to destroy the dogs by means of poisoned wheat.

West of the Mississippi river ground squirrels are exceedingly destructive, and cause the loss of many millions of dollars annually. In California alone every year they eat up about $2,000,000 worth of wheat, and they carry the germs of diseases which can be communicated to human beings through the agency of fleas. The State of Washington is troubled in a similar manner, and spends $25,000 a year in fighting the pests.

In Nevada the agricultural sections are being overrun with field mice. In Humboldt Valley last year the mice destroyed 15,000 acres out of a total of 20,000 acres of alfalfa, so that the fields had to replowed and replanted.

"The rat continues to cause enormous losses throughout the entire United States," Secretary Wilson says, "and during the past year an attempt was made to ascertain the approximate damage done to property by this rodent in the cities of Washington and Baltimore. Many business men were interviewed, including dealers in various kinds of merchandise, feeders of horses, managers of hotels and restaurants and manufacturers. The inquiries included all sections of the two cities and both small and large dealers. It is estimated that the loss from rats in Washington is about $400,000 a year, and in Baltimore upward of $700,000 a year. Assuming, as is probable, that similar conditions obtain in all our cities of over 100,000 inhabitants, the damage by rats in these centers of population entails a direct loss of $20,000,000 annually. This enormous sum gives an idea of the still greater total loss inflicted by this rodent throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The officers of the biological survey say that the gopher also does a great deal of damage to the crops, because it feeds upon the roots of plants and destroys great quantities of grain and garden stuff. It also throws up mounds of earth, which bury the grass and other crops. Gophers have recently proved a serious annoyance to the irrigation service by burrowing under the dams and embankments of the reservoirs and canals, causing expensive leaks and breaks. No animal, however, is more easily controlled by traps and poisons, and at the request of the reclamation service the biological survey recently sent out men to devise ways and methods of trapping gophers, so that now the animals are practically exterminated upon the government irrigation system, although they are likely to come back again if they are not looked after. It is impossible to estimate the amount of damage that they have done.

Rabbits are also doing a good deal of damage, particularly in the fruit countries. In Australia a few years ago they became so numerous that the entire population used to join in rabbit drives and slaughter millions of them at a single meeting. Rabbits breed so rapidly that it is difficult to keep them down, but it has been discovered that an inexpensive whitewash made of lime and sulphur will protect orchard trees against rabbits for at least a year, when it must be renewed.

Wolves and coyotes are being gradually exterminated on the Western plains. Secretary Wilson says that more than 1,800 wolves and about 24,000 coyotes were killed last year by locating their breeding dens and poisoning the young. He urges that this work be continued throughout the West so long as wild land exists in vast tracts where they can find safe harborage and breeding grounds. Hitherto the losses to stockmen have averaged $200,000,000 a year from these animals, but he says that by persistent effort and at a comparatively small cost they can be kept down so as to limit the damage done by them to a minimum.

In their relation to argriculture mammals differ considerably from birds. Few birds are so harmful that their wholesale destruction is called for, since, by devouring destructive insects, most of them render a full equivalent for any mischief they may commit. Such is by no means true of mammals. A few are very beneficial, and the usefulness of such servants of man as bats, skunks, weasels, badgers, foxes and moles should be known and appreciated, that their lives may be spared and they be allowed to continue their good work.

Every year witnesses an increase in the number of sportsmen who pursue our game birds, every species of which plays a more or less important part in destroying insect life and preserving the balance of nature; and this, too, while the reclamation of vast tracts of wild land for agriculture and other purposes encroaches on the breeding grounds of game birds, which are thus gradually becoming fewer in numbers, while the demand for them becomes greater and greater. Many of our insectivorous birds are also killed for food, despite the fact that state laws almost everywhere prohibit such slaughter. With these and other forces acting against the welfare of our birds, it becomes doubly important to use every means in our power not only to prevent the reduction of useful species, but to increase their numbers whenever and wherever possible.

DRAIN ON THE FORESTS

We Are Cutting Them Three Times as Fast as They Are Growing.

550,000,000 ACRES OF WOODLAND

Cheapness and Abundance of Timber Has Made Us Reckless in Its Use.

"The total yearly drain upon our forests, not counting losses from fires, storms, and insects, is some twenty billion cubic feet," says R. S. Kellogg, assistant forester in charge of the office of forest statistics, in a publication just issued by the Forest Service on "The Timber Supply of the United States."

"Our present forest area of 550 million acres may be roughly estimated to consist of 200 million acres of mature forests, in which the annual growth is balanced by death and decay, of 250 million acres partially cut or burned over, on which, with reasonable care, there is sufficient young growth to produce in the course of time a merchantable, but not a full crop of timber, and 100 million acres of more severely cut and burned over forests, on which there is not sufficient growth to produce another crop of much value.

"Taken as a whole, the annual growth of our forests under these conditions does not exceed twelve cubic feet per acre, a total of less than seven billion cubic feet. That is, we are cutting our forests three times as fast as they are growing. There is menace in the continuance of such conditions. While we might never reach absolute timber exhaustion, the unrestricted exploitation of our forests in the past has already had serious effects, and it will have much worse if it is allowed to continue unchecked.

"White pine, for instance, which was once considered inhaustible, has fallen off seventy per cent in cut since 1890, and more than forty-five per cent since 1900. The cut of oak, our most valuable hardwood lumber, has decreased sixteen per cent since 1900, and that of yellow poplar twenty-two per cent. The same story will be told of other woods if they are not conserved.

"The fact that timber has been cheap and abundant has made us careless of its production and reckless in its use. We take 250 cubic feet of wood per capita annually from our forests, while Germany uses only thirty-seven cubic feet, and France but twenty-five. On the other hand, Germany, who has learned her lesson, makes her state forests produce an average of forty-eight cubic feet of wood per acre. We have as fast-growing species as Germany, or faster, and as good or better forest soil if we protect it.

"The necessity for more farm land may eventually reduce our total forest area to 100 million acres less than it is at present. It is entirely possible, however, to produce on 450 million acres as much wood as a population much greater than we have now will really need if all the forest land is brought to its highest producing capacity and if the product is economically and completely utilized. But to reach the necessary condition of equilibrium between timber production and consumption will take many years of vigorous effort by individual forest owners, by the States, and by the National Government. None of them can solve the problem alone; all must work together."

MORE THAN HALF A MILLION TRAMPS NOW ROAMING ABOUT THE U. S.

IT IS conservatively estimated that there is an army of at least 500,000 tramps in the United States. This figure is calculated by taking as a basis the number of tramps killed on the railroads every year and multiplying it by the proportion of train men killed in the year compared to the total number of train men killed in the year compared to the total number of train men employed. But it is entirely probable that the number at present reaches nearer 1,000,000 than 500,000, says the Review of Reviews. The recent industrial depression added large accessions. Reports from railway agents throughout the country show that never in the history of the railroads was so large a number of tramps met with.

A large proportion are youths ranging from 16 to 21 years of age. Beginning with a yearning for adventure, about one-half quit the nomadic life and return home, or settle down, while the remaining half become inveterate tramps and gradually tend from vagrancy into a career of crime and semi-crime. A very large percentage of tramps, however, are adults, and comprise every species from men who will not work or who have become chronically unfitted for work, to those who are innocent victims of downright adversity that knocks and keeps them down.

Both the charitable societies and the railroad corporations have long desired some practicable method of dealing effectively with all aspects of the tramp problem. If it could be done the charitable societies would be relieved of a burdensome drain upon their time and resources, and railroads would benefit by the stoppage of the great losses and annoyances to which they have been subjected, while from a humanitarian standpoint the tramp would be given an opportunity to regain his standing in society. Hitherto all experiments have failed.

The charitable societies and the railroads believe that they have at last come upon a plan which is quite certain to prove efficacious. This plan is a transplanting, with certain modifications suitable to American conditions, of the tramp colony idea already in force in Holland, Belgium and Switzerland. Since the instituting of these colonies vagrancy has been unknown in those countries, and although they have certain features which cannot well be adopted in this country, the general plan of these European experiments will be followed.

DO ANIMALS REASON?

OPINIONS OF WASHINGTON'S ZOOLOGICAL EXPERTS

Do animals reason?

It is a question that has absorbed scientists with increasing interest ever since the days when Prof. Garner ensconced himself in a cage in the jungles of Darkest Africa and attempted to converse with the resident monkeys. According to the professor's reports, the apes whose acquaintance he made during his visit not only reasoned, but had a well-defined language of their own, and the learned man went to far as to suggest a monkey grammar, had he only patience enough to jungle his time, encaged in that far-off land.

Prof. Garner's opinions, however, have been regarded by conservative scientists as more the result of enthusiasm and vivid imagination than absolute fact. But while zoologists have taken his statements with a grain of salt, his investigations into the reasoning power of animals aroused an interest never felt before. Curators and keepers of all the great gardens throughout the world have since that time devoted themselves to the solution of the problem—do animals reason?

There are no wiser men in America than those who have charge of the National Garden in Washington, and among them there is none whose knowledge is more extended than that of Mr. Blackburn, head keeper of the Zoo, who for thirty years has devoted his time to the care and study of every kind of creature, from the lizard to the lion.

"Yes, I have read all the nature faker stories," he said. "But I have yet to learn, after all my experience, just what is meant by 'instinct' as distinguished from reasons. Scientists define instinct as 'inherited habit,' or, as another learned professor of psychology puts it, 'the blind pursuing of a means to an end.' All this is too technical for me. I cannot see the difference between a man going under the shade of a tree to get out of the hot sun, and a deer who grazes in the meadow during day, going into the mountain crags to sleep, where it knows it will be safe from the lowland wolves. The man certainly reasons that under the shade of the tree he will be protected from the heat of the sun; why can it be said that the deer reasons less when it seeks a sleeping place secure from its enemies? Why should one be called instinct and the other reason?

"The animals of the cat tribe stay hidden by day. They can not only see better at night, and therefore take their prey with greater ease, but they can lie safer from their natural enemies. Among carnivorous animals, there has never been a case known where a hungry creature attacked one that overmatched it in strength.

"Generally speaking," said Mr. Blackburn, "I think there is hardly an animal here that does not reason, when occasion requires. For instance, we have whips hanging up throughout the different animal houses, with which to chastise refractory or stubborn beasts. It is but a short time before a new animal comes to know the meaning of the whip, and generally all that is necessary for a keeper to do is to reach toward the hook on which the whip is hanging; the animal knows what that means, and does what he has before refused to do. It seems to me that is reasoning."

Lions and tigers, according to Mr. Blackburn, exhibit little reasoning power, except in the matter of getting something to eat. Snakes exhibit the smallest degree of intelligence, and in the smaller species seem hardly to have sense enough to get their food.

Clyde Powers, with twenty years of circus experience in the training of every kind of animal, except Teddy bears, expresses wonder that any one should doubt the power of animals to reason.

"There are different grades of mental power in animals just as there are among the human race," he said. "From my experience, I've decided that the four-footed highbrow is the elephant. Most animals do their tricks merely to get food, but the elephant goes through his stunts as a matter of duty; you cannot bribe him or force him by withholding his rations. Elephants are also endowed with a sense of humor."

But Dr. Edmund B. Southwick, the eminent New York bug scientist, goes far beyond all others in his conclusions, and asserts reasoning powers even in insects—a fact that will be admitted, however, by any one who has ever had a duel with an indignant bumblebee. Dr. Southwick cites a case of some brainy caterpillars that were taken out of a tree on a New York street, and in seeking to get back to their feeding ground of leaves climbed the walls of adjacent houses. Finding nothing to eat up there, they concluded there was no use staying outdoors any longer, and they might as well go into winter quarters, although it was long before the time they should have ceased feeding, and spin their cocoons. Accordingly they wrapped themselves up in their webs, spent the winter there, and emerged in the spring as moths. This, thinks the scientist, was conclusive evidence that the caterpillars had thought it all out for themselves.

MEN WHO KNEW WHEN TO QUIT.

Financial Giants Who Did Not Play the Game Till It Killed Them.

A comment not infrequently heard in Wall street runs thus: "John D. Rockefeller was the wisest of them all. He knew when to quit." So did Andrew Carnegie. So, more recently, did James Stillman. H. H. Rogers was trying to throw off his harness when struck down.

The New York Journal of Commerce says the two grand old men in the financial world whose health never seems to trouble them are J. P. Morgan and James J. Hill. Neither is ever reported as suffering from nervous breakdown or as being compelled to visit the spas of Europe. These two old friends and associates jog along quietly but very effectively year after year, doing big things without permitting these big things to undo them.

Mr. Morgan does not believe in retiring altogether from business, as in many cases that have come under his observation retirement has been followed by the tortures of ennui and a speedy end. Mr. Hill a few years ago turned over many of his duties to his son, Louis, but he still retains enough offices to keep his mind from becoming rusty, yet not enough to prevent him from taking an enlightened part in the discussion and solution of large public problems, agricultural, economic, political and financial.

TO LIVE FOREVER.

Thomas Edison has perfected a storage battery which he says will last indefinitely and revolutionize the present propelling power.

Prof. Munyon says it is only a question of time until a remedy is discovered that will supply the waste of the human body, so that one may live on almost indefinitely, barring accidents. This seems almost too good to be true, but nothing seems to be impossible in these days when we consider the flying machine and the wireless telegraph.

Prof. Munyon has certainly revolutionized the practice of medicine. He does not believe in building hospitals for consumptives. He says that consumption can always be traced to a cold. Cure a cold and you prevent consumption. His Cold and Cough Remedy will break up almost any form of a cold in a few hours and positively prevent Bronchitis and Pneumonia. To convince the medical world and people in general of the truth of his claims he has distributed millions of vials of the Cold Cure, absolutely free, from the leading newspaper offices throughout the country, and the cures that have been reported from its use have been most astonishing. These little sugar pellets contain no opium, morphine, cocaine or any harmful drug. They seem to relieve the head, throat and lungs almost immediately.

In order that no one may be deprived of this remedy he has placed it with all the druggists throughout the United States for the small sum of 25 cents, or sent postpaid on receipt of price, and with each bottle he gives this guarantee: "If Munyon's Cold and Cough Cure does not do all that is claimed for it, I will refund your money."

There are four advantages in taking Munyon's Remedies. First, they are absolutely harmless. Second, they are pleasant to take. Third, they relieve almost immediately. Fourth, they cost nothing unless they give satisfaction.

There was more than one "Little Mac" in the Federal Army during the War of the Rebellion, but the hero of this tale was not only the smartest "Mac," but the youngest and most diminutive enlisted member of the Army of the United States, and now for more than twenty-five years by far the youngest comrade in the Grand Army of the Republic and a frequent and a welcome guest at many a reunion of the G. A. R. posts other than his own. Never has this youthful veteran's recital of the surprising incidents surrounding his remarkable enlistment, the exhibition of the yellowed documents filled in with ink now faded, although clearly decipherable—his enlistment and discharge papers—failed to arouse enthusiasm among his older comrades.

In the little Mississippi river town of Fort Madison, Iowa, the site of a former governmental frontier fort and the scene of many a skirmish and more than one full-fledged battle between the redskins on one hand and the soldiers and pioneers on the other, there lived in the late '50s a young and patriotic physician, Abel Cummins Roberts, a graduate of the University of Michigan, with his wife and two little children.

In addition to being a physician Dr. Roberts was the editor and publisher of a weekly newspaper, the Fort Madison Plaindealer. He was a strong advocate of colonizing the negroes and of having the government reimburse the masters of the colonized slaves. He advocated this as the only plan that would make possible the avoidance of war.

However, partisan feeling was strong in those days—so strong, in fact, that a party of Fort Madison men provided themselves with a long, stout rope and called on the editor one night at his home and offered him the unenviable choice of abandoning his policy of advocating negro colonization and of publicly apologizing for some of the pointed things he had said in print or taking a plunge in the Father of Waters tied to his old Washington hand press with the rope.

But Dr. Roberts had heard that he would be called upon, and he had blood in his veins, so, after listening quietly to the leaders of the mob, he calmly laid his Colt's navy on the porch rail and talked bluntly and forcibly about the constitutional guarantee of free speech and of free press, and of his steadfast determination to avail himself of his constitutional rights, mob or no mob. He concluded by inviting them to "come on" if they were still dissatisfied. They refused to accept, and the editor did not change his policy.

Later, when war began and volunteers were called he forsook both the pen and his advocacy of colonization and became a member of the Twenty-first Missouri Infantry Volunteers, as Surgeon Major, and as Major Abel C. Roberts served through the entire period of the war with one brief furlough.

In 1863 the Twenty-first was quartered at Memphis, Tenn. Opposite the camp grounds was the home of a then wealthy Southern planter, Dr. Wheaton. The surgeon of the Twenty-first found occupation plenty and seldom left his quarters. One day, however, while all was quiet in camp a willowy, sweet-faced Southern girl came rushing from the old mansion of the Wheatons and into the camp of "the enemy." Mary Wheaton was in deep trouble. She had been left alone that day and something had gone wrong. Two of her father's pet pickaninnies had indulged in poison berries and were in the grip of death. The girl hastily told her troubles and asked:

"Is there not some one here who will help me, please, for they are sure 'nough dying?"

Moved by the girl's distress, Major Roberts volunteered. An emetic was given, a bit of pummeling done, and after a brief while the tangles were straightened and the children sprawled out in the sun, sadder but wiser Africans.

Major Roberts and Dr. Wheaton grew to be great friends. One day the regimental surgeon betrayed an anxiety concerning his wife, then ill in the North, to his Southern friend, and what did the old planter do but command Major Roberts to send for his little family at once. There was no disregarding such a proffer of hospitality. The open door of a Southerner means "Come in," and happy is he who does as bidden. A few days later saw the little family reunited—the husband in his tent and the little wife and two boys only a stone's throw away, safely lodged in the old planter's home.

In the early morning of Dec. 21, 1863, there arrived in camp just before reveille a youngster who was promptly christened Edward McClellan Roberts, the Edward being for one Captain Edward Blackburn (of the Twenty-first, now dead), and the McClellan for General George B. McClellan, father of New York's present mayor. Thus it was that the "Little Mac, Junior," became a genuine child of the regiment.

Quick to recognize a true soldier in the newcomer, a committee of comrades called at his tent and demanded that he surrender to their wishes. They rolled him up in a blanket and took him to headquarters. There he was regularly enrolled. A soldier at 10 days. Comrade Edward McClellan Roberts! Three years later, as sergeant of his regiment, he was honorably discharged at Fort Morgan, Ala.

Sergeant Roberts could tell you many tales of interest in connection with his army life, of his being the man begind the gun at the age of 2, and much else, but he has almost worn them out telling them at reunions and campfires, so he will spare you—all but one. It may please you to know that the regimental chaplain was one Comrade Jenkins. Chaplain Jenkins was a fighter, but not profane. Despite all this "Little Mac, Junior" was an adept pupil of his elder comrades, and he learned the art of swearing to a degree equaled by few of his elders. When asked who taught him to say such bad words he would blandly reply, "Oh, Cap'n Jenkins did." If the tiny soldier was disloyal to his chaplain he was not to the rank and file. He feels sure that the good chaplain would to-day forgive his early accusations.

For several months prior to the close of the war the Twenty-first Missouri Regiment was quartered at Fort Morgan, Ala., on Mobile Bay. It was at this post that the 3-year-old sergeant received his discharge.

By the time the regiment had moved to Fort Morgan the lad had become of interest, indeed, to his older comrades, he then being between 2 and 3 and rather precocious, perhaps, because of his association with his elders. He here found a warm, close chum in Gunner Ephraim Jones.

On one occasion the gunner thought to have a bit of fun at the expense of the juvenile comrade, hoping to give him more "big noise" than he would relish, in close proximity with the coast gun. Accordingly Jones asked the young patriot if he would like to fire the sunset gun for him.

"Sure," said the lad, in gleeful anticipation. "When may I fire it—now?"

"No, not now; it isn't sunset yet. This big gun, you know, is the one that makes the sun go down. Come around in an hour and we'll give the old sun a glorious send-off."

"All right," Ed replied; "you can count on me."

In an hour "Little Mac, Junior," appeared.

Gunner Jones placed the lanyard in the small hands of the lad, held him aloft of the coast defender and commanded, "Fire!"

"Bang!" went the big gun, which had a little extra "food" for the event. The baby gunner dropped the lanyard to applaud the music made by the war dog.

"Didn't it scare you?" asked the regular.

"No, it's better'n a drum. If you are 'fraid of 'er, just send for me any time. I'll do it for you."

"Eph" took occasion to be "'fraid" quite often thereafter, and "Little Mac Junior," enjoyed the privilege of "helping him out."

For ten years Sergeant Edward McClellan Roberts has been a resident of New York City, devoting his time to writing and literature. On a recent evening he was invited by L. T. Fetzer to visit the Fourteenth Regiment camp, United Spanish War Veterans, at their armory in Brooklyn. A spread followed an installation of officers, and after responding to urgent calls for a speech Sergeant Roberts was voted an honorary member of the camp, then in command of William J. Prendergast, and was decorated with a button of the order.

Often has the claim made for him that he is the youngest soldier of the war of 1861-65, and the youngest member of the G. A. R. been disputed, but a simple recital of the foregoing facts has promptly and easily settled each such dispute.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Band Music on the Battlefield.

Edward P. Tobie, late Sergeant Major of the First Maine Cavalry, writing for the Concord (N. H.) Veteran's Advocate about the surrender of Appomattox, speaks of an incident attending the struggle about Dinwiddie Court House:

"How the incidents of the afternoon crowd before me. Shortly after we got settled on the skirmish line our regimental band comes down near the line, just in rear of headquarters, and before we know they are there, strike up 'Yankee Doodle' loud and clear, making those woods ring as they never did before. This is received by our boys with hearty cheers, while from over the way the enemy sends back yells of derision. It is not long before there comes from across the creek the sounds of music by a rebel band, accompanied by rebel cheers. As soon as our boys catch the tune, 'Dixie,' they take their turn at howling, groaning and yelling. As the rebel band gets through, our band strikes up 'Red, White and Blue,' and the rebel band follows with 'Bonnie Blue Flag.' And for an hour or two the two bands keep up a musical duel, inspiring the men of their respective sides with their martial strains, filling our boys with patriotism, love for the Stars and Stripes, and love of country (as one of the boys says, 'That puts the fight right into me'), and doubtless inspiring the rebels with love for their cause although their music sounds somewhat tame beside ours, and we fancy ours should awaken memories in their hearts which would shame them, fighting against the old flag, while all the time they are shooting at us, and we at them at every opportunity. This is the only time I heard the music of a band on the battlefield."

General Kilpatrick's Quick Decision.

"Kilpatrick was swift to decide, and swift in action," remarked a war correspondent. "One beautiful moonlight night I was in his camp north of the Chattahoochee. Lieutenant Northrup of his staff, had been dispatched to Sherman's headquarters for orders. We were sitting on rustic benches, telling stories, laughing and smoking in genuine camp style, Kil doing most of the talking. Presently, as Kilpatrick was in the middle of a story, Lieutenant Northrup rode up, dismounted, called him aside and reported. The General walked slowly out to a low fence—we were encamped in a yard—looked up at the moon for not to exceed fifteen seconds—then turning walked quickly back, summoned his Adjutant General, Estes, gave his orders, and in five minutes resumed his seat and his story. Acting under those orders, delivered to brigade commanders within half an hour, the cavalry division forced a crossing at Sandtown at daylight and made the memorable raid around Atlanta, cutting the rail road at Lovejoy's Station and running the gauntlet of infantry and artillery in making its way back to the Union lines."

FARMS AND FARMERS

Neat Storage Box for Vegetables.

Instead of keeping the vegetables in barrels or boxes scattered all over the cellar, I have made a set of storage bins. Itook six drygoods boxes and bolted them together as shown in the drawing. I put legs on them to hold them off the floor and a cover on the box. Then I painted on the boxes the names of the vegetables we generally store. This makes a neat and handy storage bin, and is well worth the little time it takes to make it. Before we had this bin we stored the different vegetables in barrels, boxes, washtubs, lard cans, or any receptacle that happened to be at hand when we harvested the crop. These were scattered about the cellar promiscuously, and sometimes we knew where to find what we wanted and sometimes we did not. There is nothing more satisfying to a farmer's wife than to be able to take a friend into a cellar where everything is neat and in order.—A. O. Griner in Farm and Home.

VEGETABLES STORAGE BOX.

Ventilation of Stable.

Here's a good method of ventilating an ordinary stable. Intake flues are constructed in the side walls. The ventilation flues will take up considerable space but are more efficient than a single flue. Openings are at or near the floor level and the tops several feet above the ridge of the roof. Caps or cowls may be placed over them to keep out rain and snow.

Another arrangement of flues which is quite effective in securing ventilation. The opening in the center of B may be provided with a shutter to prevent too rapid movement of air. Separate outlets may be provided or the single cupola as shown.

Alfalfa for the Diary.

Successful dairy farming depends a great deal on growing the necessary feed on the farm. City milkmen can buy high-priced feeds and make a profit, but farmers who ship longer distances require all the advantage they can get. Alfalfa is getting to be one of the most important dairy feeds. It can be grown in almost any part of the country where there is sufficient moisture within reach of the long taproot, provided that there is no rock to interfere with its growth. If you never tried alfalfa, commence now by fitting a small piece of ground very carefully and make it very rich on top. The new plants are delicate and require careful feeding until they get started. Most failures are caused by insufficient preparation of the seed bed.

Right Time to Pick Apples.

Apples intended for cold storage should not be allowed to become too ripe on the tree. When an apple is fully grown, highly colored, but still hard, it is in prime condition to be picked and stored. It has then obtained its highest market value because it is most attractive in appearance and best in quality. If picked before entirely ripe apples deteriorate more rapidly, and it is best to allow an apple to become a trifle overripe than to pack it in an immature state. Many people have the erroneous opinion that apples should be picked before fully ripe in order to keep well in cold storage, but this is a mistake.

Testing Breeds for Milk.

In testing several breeds of cows the Virginia Experiment Station found that "in profits on milk the Holsteins led with $4.92 per individual per month; the grades were second with $4.27. The most profitable cow was Buckeye DeKol, who milked twenty-one months, gave 12,498.4 pounds of milk and 524.24 pounds of butter. The profit on the milk was $201.05 and on the butter $41.51."

Our Farm Products.

This country each year produces more corn than all the other countries of the world combined—2,927,000,000 out of 3,888,000,000 bushels. It grows more wheat than any other country in the world—634,000,000 out of 3,108,000,000 bushels. It produces more oats than any other country in the world—754,000,000 out of 3,582,000,000 bushels. It is the third largest producer of barley in the world, 153,000,000 bushels—only 7,000,000 bushels less than Germany, with Russia leading.

Raising Chickens.

The greatest drawback to the chicken business is that there is not a day's let-up in the steady routine of work from the time an egg is pipped until the ax closes the hen's history. It is natural after the pullets are feathered out and weaned and the roosters separated from them to let up a little in the care bestowed on them. This is a great mistake if winter eggs are expected. If there is one thing more than another that the average poultryman is liable to err in it is lack of fresh air in the coops at night. Slip out some hot night about 11 o'clock and you will perhaps hear the thump, thump of restless chickens crowding around against each other, fighting in vain for a cool, airy spot to sleep in comfort. Or in the morning take a whiff of the fetid, unwholesome air before letting the chickens out, and you will realize that night spent under such conditions must prevent the steady, healthy growth necessary for best results. This condition of affairs is liable to be worse with incubator chickens, because they are raised in larger flocks and the tendency is to crowd them more after taking them from the brooders.

When Hens Are Moulting.

One of the difficulties in poultry raising is to get the hens to molt early, so that they will be ready to lay in the fall and winter, when eggs are high. Left to themselves, hens will take a long time to molt, and will not finish until cold weather sets in. They will not then lay until early spring and all the profits for the winter months are lost. At the poultry institute held in Denver by the Colorado Agricultural College, W. J. R. Wilson, a poultry man of long experience, gave his method of controlling the molting of hens. As soon as the hens are through laying he turns them on alfalfa, feeding them dry bran only, in addition. Under this treatment they get thin. Then he feeds them a mixed ration of grains and meat, giving a light feed in the morning and all they will eat at noon and night. Under this treatment they finish molting quickly, get new feathers and begin laying in September. By October 1 they are in full laying condition and make a profit through the fall and winter.

To Make the Hens Lay.

If the hens don't lay, turn them out and let them dig and hunt in the ground for food, is the advice of T. F. McGrew, in the Country Gentleman. Bury small grain where they will find it when they dig. This will induce them to hunt, and while thus employed they will find bugs and worms that will quicken the production of eggs. It is well to follow this plan as soon as the spade will turn the ground, for it adds vigor and strength to the hens and insures strong, healthy chicks. The lazy, idle hen is of no use but to sit about, eat and grow fat. If she will not work, she will not lay. If she will not lay, her life should end, and her fat carcass grace the table. You can rest assured that the indolent hen is a nonproducer; soon she becomes too fat to lay and too tough to be eaten.

Ants and Lice.

When ants are seen running up and down fruit trees an examination will usually disclose the presence of plant lice on the branches and leaves. As is well known to expert orchardists, most plant lice are attended and cared for by ants, and the presence of ants may serve as an indication of infestation of plant lice. Under such circumstances the ants do no harm to the plant except in the way of assisting in the distribution of plant lice.

When Hogs Cough.

Hogs not living in dusty houses, that have persistent coughs, are, as a rule, suffering from worms. An excellent remedy is to dissolve one-half pound of copperas in warm water and mixing in the slop for 100 head of pigs. This dose should be given for five mornings; then wait a few days, and repeat if necessary. For a smaller number than 100 head give a good dram to each head.

Late Weeds in Garden.

Weeds in the garden during the months of August and September will produce seed before they are noticed, stocking the ground with weed seed for next year. The garden should be kept free from weeds until frost. This will save considerable labor in the growing of vegetables, as most of the work required is due to the weeds and grass that come up in the early season.

A Cheap Insecticide.

Some gardeners use lime and tobacco water for destroying many insects which prey on plants. A half bushel of lime is emptied into a barrel of water, together with a bucketful of tobacco stems. This is well stirred up, and after it has settled for a day or two the clear water is syringed over bushes, killing all insects that come within its reach.

Grafting on Willow.

A horticultural curiosity is to be seen in the garden of Gloucester Lodge, Portsmouth Road, near London. A gooseberry bush, a currant bush and an elderberry tree are growing high up on a willow tree, to which they have by some means become grafted. All are fruiting and fruit is forming on the gooseberry and currant bushes.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Peach Marmalade.

Peel and stone the peaches and weigh them. Allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar to each pound of the fruit. Put the fruit into the preserving kettle and set at the side of the range, where it will come gradually to the boil. Stew until tender and broken, drain off the superfluous liquid, add the sugar and cook steadily for ten minutes more. Just before taking from the fire stir in a tablespoonful of lemon juice for every pound of peaches. Take at once from the fire and seal.

Vegetable Marrow.

Peel the vegetable and cut it into squares of uniform size, about an inch square if the vegetable is young and tender. Cover with salted boiling water and cook for fifteen minutes, or until tender. Drain, handling carefully not to break the squares, and keep hot while a white sauce is prepared. Put the marrow into a heated vegetable dish, pour the well-seasoned white sauce over it and serve.

Corn Pudding.

Grate the corn from six full ears. Whip three eggs light, add to them a pint of milk, stir in the grated corn, season with salt and pepper and a teaspoonful of sugar, add a tablespoonful of melted butter, beat all hard and turn into a greased pudding dish. Bake until the pudding is set and serve in the dish in which it was cooked. This is a delicious vegetable to eat with roast or broiled meat or poultry.

Corn Fritters.

One dozen ears of peep o' day corn, or half a dozen ears of country gentleman. Scrape from the cob and mix with a tablespoonful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt and one egg well beaten. Drop by spoonfuls on a hot greased griddle and bake slowly so as to be well done through, and be very careful that they do not burn.

Canned Stewed Tomatoes.

Pour boiling water over the tomatoes and slip off the skins. Lay the tomatoes in a colander as you do this, that the juice may drain off. Put the tomatoes into a preserving kettle and bring slowly to a boil. Stew for fifteen minute, dipping off any superfluous liquor, season with salt and pour the boiling mass into vegetable jars, filling them to the brim, and seal immediately.

Jelly Jumbles.

Cream one-half cup butter with one cup sugar, and one egg, one-half teaspoon soda dissolved in one-half cup sour milk and flour enough to roll. Roll about one-fourth inch thick, cut with biscuit cutter and from half of these cut out the center with a large thimble. Spread jelly over the biscuit halves, cover with the doughnut halves and bake. These are very nice.

Tomato Soup.

Wash and quarter two quarts of tomatoes and two onions. Add three cloves, a little thyme and allow all to cook for half an hour. Rub through a wire sieve, and return the juice to the kettle. Add a lump of butter, a little flour and sugar with salt and pepper to taste. Let cook for three minutes and serve with cubes of toast.

Pea Soup.

Cut one pound each of beef and salt pork into inch pieces. Boil one quart of peas until tender and press through a sieve. Add this pulp to the meat, cover with four quarts of water and boil until the quantity has been reduced to two quarts. Season with celery or sweet herbs, salt and pepper and serve.

Wine Drop Cookies.

Cream one cup of butter with two cups of sugar; add one cup of molasses, one of cold coffee, one of chopped raisins, two beaten eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking soda and four of ground cloves dissolved in the cold coffee. Add seven cups of flour, mix well, roll out, cut into cookies and bake.

Peanut Sandwiches.

Shell and skin freshly roasted peanuts and roll them to fine crumbs on a pastry board. Add salt to taste, and mix the powdered nuts with enough fresh cream cheese to make a paste that can be easily spread on unbuttered bread. Keep in a cool, damp place until wanted.

Short Suggestions.

A few shreds of candied orange peel will give a delicious flavor to a bread pudding.

Always use lard to grease your cake pans, as the salt in the butter causes it to stick to the pans.

It is better to wipe over meat with a wet cloth than to immerse it in water or let water run over it.

A sponging with a solution of one part ammonia to ten parts of water is said to brighten the colors in a faded carpet.

The housekeeper who goes to market rather than order by telephone will find she gets better things for less money.

Don't light the kitchen fire unless there is water in the boiler. If not the rush of cold water is liable to crack the boiler.

If you want to keep your desserts on the top of the ice place a newspaper over the ice and your dishes never slip off or tip over.

Select a dozen or so of the smoothest and largest splints from the new broom and lay they away to use in testing cake when it is baking.

When one's foot is slightly injured and the bed clothes add to the discomfort, a small hatbox placed in the bed is found useful. The foot can be slipped into it and the box supports the weight of the covers.

BURNED AND ITCHED.

Eczema on Hand, Arms, Legs and Face—It Was Something Terrible—Complete Cure by Cuticura.

"About fifteen or eighteen years ago eczema developed on top of my hand. It burned and itched so much that I was compelled to show it to a doctor. He pronounced it ringworm. After trying his different remedies the disease increased and went up my arms and to my legs and finally on my face. The burning was something terrible. I went to another doctor who had the reputation of being the best in town. He told me it was eczema. His medicine checked the advance of the disease, but no further. I finally concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies and found relief in the first trial. I continued until I was free from the disease and I have not been troubled since. C. Burkhart, 236 W. Not Coughing Today?

Yet you may cough tomorrow! Better be prepared for it when it comes. Ask your doctor about keeping Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. Then when the hard cold or cough first appears you have a doctor's medicine at hand. Your doctor's approval of its use will certainly set all doubt at rest. Do as he says. He knows. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

"Something Different AND Something Better"

The Patented Two-Flue Construction, the facility to heat six griddles with direct draft damper open, the quick heating reservoir and the ease of heating water in it as quickly as with a teakettle, are some of the special features and qualities of that make them what the head line reads.

The Construction of LAUREL Ranges is extremely different from that used in all others. You say, "Why, this or that range looks just like a Laurel." True, but they are not constructed like it. Because of their construction "Laurel" Ranges are better ranges.

We would spell it b-e-s-t if we considered three or more degrees of range quality. Recognizing only two—Laurel and contemporary makes—we say "better." Better steel, better castings, better nickel plate, better designs, better workmanship, all contribute to the making of a better range—The Laurel.

Laurel Ranges will give "better" returns from a given quantity of fuel and at the same time do better baking.

As "Seeing is believing" an examination of LAUREL Ranges will convince you that "Laurel" features are not to be found in our advertising only.

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

AWFUL SLAUGHTER.

Street Cars Kill and Injure 33,000 Yearly in New York Alone.

According to statistics collected by the Public Service Commission, the street railways of Greater New York are killing people at a greater rate than many of the great wars of history. For the months of February, March, April and May they show that upward of 11,000 were killed and injured in the Greater City by car collisions, by pedestrians being run over, or by vehicles being struck by cars, by accidents accruing from boarding cars or alighting from them, by contact with the electricity which propels the cars and through miscellaneous other accidents connected with urban travel and in which street cars were primarily the cause.

Eleven thousand in four months! This means an average of 33,000 a year. It means, moreover, that in a twelve months' time enough people are killed or injured by the surface cars of Greater New York to populate the towns of New Rochelle, Haverstraw, Hackensack and Long Branch. The six bloodiest battles of the Civil War were Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Wilderness, Antietam, Chancellorsville and Chickamauga. The total number killed, wounded and missing in these six battles aggregated less than 105,000. These battles stretched throughout the four years of war in which two valiant armies were doing their best to destroy each other with the best means of destruction that were then at hand. But in these piping times of peace it seems that the street cars of one city alone can bring about almost as many casualties in a given time as could these embattled armies.

According to some statistics which have been compiled by Rev. Josiah Strong, president of the American Institute of Social Service, our peaceful vocations cost more lives every two days than this nation lost in battle during the entire war with Spain. "In the United States," this compiler asserts, "there are killed in four years 80,000 more than fell in battle or died of wounds during the four years of the Civil War. Incredible as it may seem, yet it is no less true that in the same length of time we kill 53 per cent more people than two great armies could destroy, equipped with all the weapons of death that ingenuity could then devise and making death and destruction their eager business. We are killing more than twice as many every year as perished by violence in both the French and English armies during the Crimean war. There are more killed and wounded on our railroads every year than the entire losses of the Boer war on both sides in three years."

Six weeks have been consumed in trying the Ginder ditch case at Auburn, and the end is not yet in sight On account of the duration of the trial Judge Bratton has been subject to a severe strain. Six attorneys are representing the litigants They are J. E. Rose and D. M. Link for petitioners, and J. W. Baxter, J. E Pomeroy, P. V. Hoffman, of Auburn, and E. B. The following is a very truthful remark: "The man who grows up in his native town is regarded as a boy by his elders until he is well started down the declivity of life that ends in a hole. The stranger who comes into a place is more often pushed to the front than the young man who has grown up with the town. This is the reason why so many young men become dissatisfied with their home surroundings and long to cast their lot in other quarters."

Here is the way the papers will write up weddings ten years hence: "The bride looked very well in a traveling dress, but all eyes were centered upon the groom. He wore a dark suit that fitted his form perfectly and in his dainty gloved hands he carried a small rose. He is loved by all for his many accomplishments, his tender grace and his winning ways. The bride commands a good salary as bookkeeper and the groom will miss none of the luxuries to which he has been accustomed. A crowd of pretty men saw him off at the depot.

The stove factory proposition which has attracted much attention in Butler during the past four weeks, is at present hovering between life and death. Not however because the citizens did not come up to their part of the agreement, but because the promoter and his fellows failed to sign the original form of the contract which was agreed upon by the promoter and the Commercial club. Last week they came to Butler, as every one supposed to sign the contract and select a site upon which to build. But they soon began to quibble and find fault with one thing and an other until every body became disgusted with them, and it was even whispered that they were a set of grafters, and all they wanted was an opportunity to get away with the people's money. If that was it they must have been sorrily disappointed when they learned that the committee proposed to hold them to the first agreement. This they did, and voiced the sentiments of their constituents and placed themselves more in the confidence of the people than before. There has been some correspondence since then between the committee and the factory men, but as yet no conclusion reached Another factory proposition will be investigated by the Commercial club which we hope will be more satisfactory to our people.

The metropolitan cities of the United States get performances in their theatres that the smaller cities cannot support on account of the enormous expense, such as great productions with 200 people on the stage, which possibly is the only reason that the production is great. Richard Mansfield when starring in "Cyrano de Bergerac" of "Henry V." could not afford to play the smaller cities but last season in "Beaucairie" it was possible for him to do so because he merely carried a limited number of fine artists in his support; still this play was just as attractive in metropolitan cities as one of his great-number-of-people productions. Other artists play large cities that can afford to play smaller cities also, for instance, Mgrs. Walters & May make it possible for Miss Courtenay Morgan to play them because "A Woman of Mystery" can be played by a moderately small company. It is hoped that the citizens of Butler will give credit to our local manager for bringing such attractions to our city thereby encouraging more artists of this quality to come.

BUTLER, INDIANA.

A. S. POWERS, - - - Publisher.

The south pole is now the burning question.

Harry Thaw has been a great money maker for expert witnesses.

"All Hats Off to the Farmer," says a headline. And open your purse, too.

Somebody declares that politics is a disease. And in most cases it is incurable.

The new tariff law is now in effect. How does it feel not to be taxed on your hide?

The milliners say they lost money on the "peach basket" hat. This makes it unanimous.

Dr. Cook doubtless noticed that the earth seemed flat at the pole, as the geographies say it is.

There is some talk of abolishing the $2 note. Why not? The fives are much more convenient.

A judge has ruled that a man may swear at his wife. The best plan, however, is to swear by your wife.

Lady Cardigan is of the opinion that a girl should not get married until she is old enough to know better.

It is against the law to swear in certain Kansas towns. Think of having to walk out into the country to swear!

The Countess of Cardigan says no girl knows her mind in her teens. The countess, it may readily be deducted, is in her "tys."

When a man has enough money laid aside to keep him on Easy street for the rest of his days, he ought to give others a chance.

"How do you like the new $50 bill?" asks the Manchester, N. H., Union. Oh, five thousand times better than the Lincoln cent!

Why do they seek communication with Mars? Because there are people constantly asking questions that no one on earth can answer.

Mrs. Besant says that India saw flying machines centuries ago. So did we, but we never saw them fly until Orville and Wilbur were incarnated.

A Michigan judge has decided that a man may spank his wife when it is necessary. Now it will take a judge and a jury to decide when it is necessary.

The new woman superintendent of the Chicago public schools will receive a salary of $10,000 a year. Where does she stand on the income tax proposition?

Mrs. Decker expects that feminine fashions will be reformed when women get the right to vote. They will have to be if the voters expect to keep their hats on straight.

Some of the bones of Buddha have recently been found in India. It is hoped that the discoverer has his diary and instruments where he can readily lay his hands upon them in case he is called upon to furnish proof of his discovery.

Abdul Hamid, former Sultan of Turkey, is reported to be losing his mind owing to constant worrying. We suppose his worry is caused because he has only eleven wives and about $20,000,000 instead of the large harem and the immense treasure that he formerly possessed.

Most men marry for love—and some of them stay married for the same reason. There are others. Frank Melchoir of Hoboken, N. J., is one of the others. Mr. Melchoir has no fondness for a diet of "love and cheese and kisses." He demands a decidedly more substantial bill of fare. He was haled into court for administering forcible reproof to his better half; and in the cold light of the police court the source of domestic infelicity was disclosed. No, it was not that love had fled. Not at all. Love was permanently roosting there and had taken the place of the cook. That was the trouble. The head of the family would come home from work hungry and tired; and would find his wife arrayed like a bride; but with no supper ready.

To the manufacturing of fads in connection with postal cards there seems to be no end. The picture card originally contained an excellent idea. It had a touch of nature and appealed to the imagination. But what degenerate forms it speedily assumed, and what a nuisance it became! The indecent cards required police intervention. The merely vulgar card has had to seek obscurity and a congenial atmosphere. The varieties that are fit will survive, whether they are made in Germany, France or in the home market. The plain, unadorned post card retains its usefulness and hold, however, and will never be wholly displaced. In France, it appears, some aspirant to fame or pseudo-benefactor of mankind has invented a labor-saving card that resembles in form the Australian ballot. It bears all sorts of messages, sentiments and nutshell formulas, and all that the purchaser has to do is to find the box that fits his case and mark it with a cross. The "busiest" traveler, it is supposed, will spare the time to write the address, for, alas, that labor cannot be saved as long as names are so wastefully varied and places so innumerable. But think of the joy of the receipt of the inspiring card, with the one small printed line intended for his benefit among a wilderness of "sentiments" that are "lost" in space and time! Think of the thrill in the stereotyped messages! Labor saving has its limits. The inventors must really leave us a little spontaneity, a real chance for individual expression, for "home industry."

How much do men know about women's dress, and how much do they care about it? is an interesting question raised by a curious advertisement printed in London. The person who placed the advertisement announces himself as "a man of good position, with very critical, refined and exclusive knowledge," and much experience of the best firms which cater to women's wants. He is "willing to be consulted on matters of dress and millinery." The heads of a number of well-known dressmaking establishments, when asked for an opinion, all agreed that the knowledge of men about women's dress is small, and their advice in regard to it of little account. They admitted that the heads of some of the most noted dressmaking establishments had been men, but they were of the opinion that the men succeeded only by virtue of being good business managers, and that the details were worked out by women in their employ. "It is only the result that men notice," was the general agreement. Very likely there is truth in this view, but there is also truth in the opposite side of the proposition, says the Youth's Companion. Many women are so intent upon the details that they lose sight of the result. They cannot see the forest because of the trees; and it is here that the advice and judgment of a man of taste may be of service—especially the advice of the husband. He is a man of taste, else he would not have selected so charming a woman for a wife. In a general way, the preference of men is for simplicity in women's dress. It makes for good sense in material and for directness in accomplishing a desired end. Men are uncritical and undiscriminating in the matter of fabrics, but as the London dressmakers tacitly admitted, display frequently sound judgment in regard to the general effect. Above all, they are far more inclined than women to consider the individual case rather than the general style; and that is not an unmixed evil.

Science and Invention

Prizes will be offered at the coming German aeronatical exposition for a metal lighter than aluminum, but retaining its solidity, and for balloon halls of various types.

The two battleships authorized by the last Congress, which will be laid down next fall, will carry heavier batteries than any other warships afloat or ordered by any nation.

To measure the amount of air admitted through cracks in buildings a novel instrument has been devised, shaped like a funnel and carrying a small anemometer in its nozzle.

While the forests of the United States are increasing at the rate of 7,000,000,000 cubic feet a year, the country is using 23,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood each twelve months.

A simple fire escape patented by an Iowa woman consists of a spool over which a rope is wound two or three times. At one end of the rope is a seat, the occupant of which lowers himself with the other end, the friction of the spool checking the rapidity of descent.

At Nelson, British Columbia, a large electric smelter is now at work reducing mixed ores of lead and zinc. The ore is first crushed to the size of wheat grains, and then roasted, by which process most of the sulphur is removed. From the roaster the ore goes to the electric furnace, which melts it into slag. The lead, sinking through the slag, passes into a crucible, the zinc takes the gaseous form and is led into condensers, from which it is ladled out into pigs.

Exaggerated ideas have been entertained, according to the opinion of F. A. Lucas, concerning the prodigious size of the ancient mammoths, whose remains have been found in Alaska and Siberia. It is a mistake, ne says, to ascribe to them a greater size than that of the modern elephant. He believes that no Siberian mammoth has been found with a greater height, at the shoulders, than 9 feet 6 inches. Indian elephants occasionally attain this height, whereas the African elephant often stands 11 feet at the shoulders, and sometimes slightly more. The real giants among fossil elephants were found in southern Europe and the western and southwestern parts of the United States. These stood "from 12 feet 6 inches to possibly 13 feet 6 inches high."

The constantly growing importance of india rubber in various industries makes the question of the cultivation of the rubber plant, as well as that of the production of "synthetic rubber," one of general interest. The investigations of Herbert Wright appear to show that the wild Para rubber is superior to that produced from cultivated trees. "A wise manufacturer," says Mr. Wright, "would not dare to buy fifty tons of cultivated rubber and store it for six months, for fear of grave deterioration in quality, but he would buy thousands of tons of up-river fine Para with a full knowledge that it would grow better in storage." As to synthetic rubber, Mr. Wright asks how we can have that when we do not yet fully understand the chemical composition of the components of natural rubber.

Made in New York.

A New Yorker, dining a Philadelphia friend, wanted to show him all the delicacies of the season. One dish in particular the Philadelphian exclaimed over in delight.

"This is made of snails," said his New York host. "Don't you have snails in Philadelphia?"

"Oh, yes," responded the Philadelphian, "but we can't catch the pesky things."—Lippincott's.

People are never stingy with things they don't want.

THE LIGHTING OF A GREAT CITY

THE lighting of a great city presents problems that the ordinary layman never dreams of. So readily are his wants supplied he takes it as a matter of course that there should be light when he turns on the button on his electric lamp, or gas at the nipple when he opens the tap, and it is only when these services fail or are impaired that he begins to pay attention. When the shades of night settle down the city streets are lighted. That, of course, is a part of the regular service of the lighting companies. But in great cities like New York occasions frequently arise during the course of a business day, sometimes with little warning, which turn daylight conditions into those of an evening and compel the use of artificial light in myriads of offices.

Scattered all over the city in apartment houses, stores and buildings of every description the gas company has little instruments of a special design, gauges that register the exact pressure in the mains at that particular point. By law, this pressure at the street level should be from one to two and a half inches. When, by any contingency, this pressure is lowered, the gauge communicates the fact automatically to another gauge, hanging on the wall of one of the engine houses, and rings a bell, warning a valve-man who is supposed to have his eye constantly on the needle.

Immediately the valve-man throws over a lever, which raises the pressure in the pipes by admitting gas from the storage tanks. The entire time consumed, from the registration of the falling of the pressure to the moment when the fresh supply of gas begins to flow into the mains, is generally not more than fifteen seconds. In other words, before the pressure in any main has lowered sufficiently to cause the slightest trouble, it has been raised; once the gas engineers know that some part of the city is beginning to draw excessively upon them, they are able to meet the demand. This holds true, no matter whether the affected area is limited in size or includes the entire metropolitan district. It is simply a question of throwing open more gas tanks. As often as not, too, when a call for extra gas is caused by a storm, the men in the engine room have seen the storm coming and are prepared for it in advance.

The amount of trouble a comparatively short storm can cause is all but unbelievable. A single half hour of dingy clouds will call for 2,000,000 additional feet of gas. It is an ordinary thing for one unexpected storm to be the cause of the consumption of 6,000,000 feet of gas at a time of day when the gas company was warranted in relying on plenty of sunlight. Clerks at their desks, people sitting in their libraries at home, servants in kitchens, all at the same moment find themselves plunged into semi-darkness. And all, with one accord, make a dash for the nearest light. The city that has been getting along comfortably on its usual scant daytime allowance is suddenly illuminated as it is at night.

There is always a considerable supply of gas in the storage tanks, enough for an ordinary emergency, and it is upon this, of course, that reliance is had in the event of a fog or storm. More gas can be made if necessary. Sunday is a light day, as a rule, running from 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 feet behind week days, and this Sunday surplus constitutes the bulk of what is available for unexpected drains.

The average winter day calls for the development of 200,000 horsepower by the New York Edison Company's power house. In the summer the smaller demand for artificial light reduces this to a figure seldom in excess of 150,000 horse-power. But the horse-power men never know what may occur in the midst of summer time to necessitate a jump of 50,000 to 60,000 horse-power. And they must be ready to satisfy such a demand without any delay whatsoever. On the switchboard a map of the stations shows him which ones are receiving current and which are not. Little different colored discs of pasteboard, hung on hooks, tell him at a glance which cables are live and which are dead. When men are at work on cables or doing repair work of a dangerous nature in the stations, word is telephoned to the "system operator." He promptly cuts out the cable that threatens them and hangs on the hook of that station a disc bearing the number of men in the squad. Whenever a man leaves the work, that news, also, is telephoned to the "system operator," and he puts another disc on the hook showing the diminished number of men, in order that he may know at a glance where the repair men are distributed, and not run the risk of shocking some poor fellow to death by the careless twist of a switch.

The ideal time to see the "system operator" at work is on some summer afternoon, when the swift approach of a storm has put him and his fellow workers on their mettle. Then, for a bare five minutes, the long room of switches and levers is the scene of a turmoil you can find nowhere else on earth, save in a war office the night before an army takes the field, or in a newspaper composing room when the last edition is going to press.

WE MUST GROW OLD.

Problem That Has Tormented Men of Science Is Still Unsolved.

Every living being of adult age begins to grow old. In the case of man the weight of years makes itself felt more or less heavily. It is a matter of heredity and of good hygiene. But, although certain persons are old before their time, there are none who, having reached a certain age, are not old. Old age is a physiologic state.

It would seem that if we could penetrate the mechanism of old age we ought to be able to retard its effects and to remain young for a correspondingly longer time, Dr. L. Menard says in the Paris Cosmos, according to a translation in the Literary Digest. The alchemists sought long to solve this problem, and it has always tormented scientific men. The ancients thought that by infusing into an old man's veins the blood of a youth new vigor might be given to him. They tried such transfusion of blood, but without success, as it is scarcely necessary to say. We find in various authors a proof of the antiquity of this process. * * * In modern times we have taken it up again, but in a totally different class of cases. * * * The transfusion of blood cannot postpone the effects of old age on the organs.

The living being takes from his environment the substances necessary for the performance of his functions. He transforms them, assimilates them and excretes them after he has finished with them. In a culture of microbes the waste substances accumulate and are one of the causes of the aging of the microbes. Transport some of these microbes into fresh bouillon and they will take on new activity; they will become young again.

In most complex organisms life may be reduced essentially to the same physico-chemical changes, with most complex machinery of co-ordination and elimination. The waste materials, more or less completely oxidized, are eliminated through natural channels. When the activity of the organs is such that the elimination is not rapid enough, there is a sensation of fatigue, need of rest and sleep. During rest and sleep the changes are slower, the waste is eliminated, the sensation of fatigue, need of rest and sleep. During rest and sleep the changes are slower, the waste is eliminated, the sensation of fatigue is felt no longer until new efforts bring it on again. But there are insoluble substances, of the nature of tendon or bone, which are continually formed during the working of the organism, and which are either not eliminated at all or are eliminated incompletely, during repose. They progressively clog the organisms and are the cause of old age.

As is remarked by Le Dantec, who is the author of this hypothesis, the muscles of old animals are much more cartilaginous, because of this accumulation of tendinous substances; but it is not generally in the muscles that this incrustment becomes injurious to the organism. The effect on the walls of the blood vessels is more dangerous because these vessels, becoming fragile, may break. "Every one," it is said, "is as old as his arteries."

Our Numerous Ancestors.

I asked a friend a short time back how many ancestors he had in the direct line twenty generations back. After a minute's reflection he suggested fifty. It may be a little surprising and of interest to some of our readers to learn that they each have had more than a million ancestors within comparative recent years, and that without taking into account uncles and aunts, says a writer to the Strand. Starting with one's parents, each person usually has two, a father and a mother. The father had his two parents and the mother had hers. Thus each person has four grandparents. One step farther and we have eight great-grandparents. I know a case within living memory where a man had four great-grandparents all living. A simple calculation gives the astonishing result that our lineal ancestors during twenty generations number no fewer than 1,048,576, or sufficient people if all living to populate the whole of Wales.

A Heart-Rending Sacrifice for the Book-Loving Woman.

Celia Framley had dropped in to have a chat—a "next to the last word," she always called it—with her friend, Marcia Leslie. At last, having talked with all her usual eager vivacity, she sat leisurely back, stirring her cup of tea.

"I'll have another lump, Marcia," she said, with mock reproach. "You're always forgetting that I haven't just one sweet tooth, but a whole set of them. Now tell me, what have you been doing?"

"A very useful thing, my dear," answered her friend, slowly. "I've been interesting myself in Myrtle's reading."

Miss Framley gave a little shriek of amusement. "What, 'The Duchess' and 'Laura Jean Libbey?' 'Oh, what a falling off is there!'" she quoted, with genial sarcasm, for immediately her mind made a vivid picture of Myrtle, a half-pretty, wholly pathetic little figure, who plodded patiently through her cleaning cares, apparently unfitted for any others.

But Marcia had already broken out in ardent defense of her protege.

"No, not trash at all, and you'll never believe me, but it's poetry," she said. "I threw away an old Browning text Bob had in college, and Myrtle found it and asked me if she might have it. I gave it to her—and I laughed; and I hate myself whenever I think of it. Do you know, she's read it all, with such intelligent appreciation!

"Why, the other night she looked at the west, and said, 'Miss Marcia, I suppose that's what Browning means when he says, "Where the quiet colored end of evening smiles."' And for her birthday, last week, I gave her Palgrave's 'Golden Treasury'—before this I've always given her silly bows and collars—and she's read it all aloud to her mother, and they loved it. Poor little thing! She has so few books!"

All through Marcia's speech Celia had put in little fluttering "Ahs!" and "Ohs!" of excitement and interest, and when her friend stopped speaking, she was sitting quite on the edge of her chair.

"I'm a beast, and a stupid one, too, to misjudge Myrtle so!" she declared, warmly, for she loved and admired with eager intelligence all good literature. "And as a penance I'm going to give her some of my treasures."

But in the common light of the next day her generous impulse was harder to carry out. She stood before her bookcase, fingering the volumes, and wondering how she could ever bear parting with them. A country doctor's daughter, books were her luxury. The Thackeray she had earned by endless copying of manuscripts for her father; the beautiful edition of Tennyson meant that she had worn shabby gloves for a winter; the set of Jane Austen a willingly renounced party frock.

Her beloved books! Now, half-heartedly, she built her sacrificial pile. Then a sudden thought made her throat tighten and ache a little. Books had always seemed very real to her, their authors living friends. Would her idols feel that she loved them less well, cherished them less tenderly, if she gave them away? She picked up her copy of Lowell, and it fell open easily to "The Vision of Sir Launfal," almost her dearest poem. And out of the whole page these two lines seemed to spring:

"Who giveth himself with his alms feeds three, Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me!"

"That settles it!" she said, aloud. "Celia, you're a selfish pig! The best way to love the masters is to share their glory with some one else." She caught up a generous armful and ran, hatless, impetuous, to Marcia's door.

"Give these books to Myrtle—and I want her to keep them—with my love!" she panted, and she thrust out the pile. Then she turned and walked quickly away. She had given herself with her alms.—Youth's Companion.

MUSICIAN A MASTER OF WIT.

Biography of Edward MacDowell Reveals Master's Caustic Humor.

In a biography of Edward MacDowell by Lawrence Gilman, the writer quotes some of the famous musician's witticisms. On one occasion he had been told of a performance of his composition, "To a Wild Rose," played by a high-school girl on a high-school piano at a high-school graduation festivity. "Well," MacDowell remarked, "I suppose she pulled it up by the roots!"

Some one sent him, about this time, relates Mr. Humiston, a program of an organ recital at which this same "Wild Rose" was to be played.

"He was not pleased with the idea, thinking doubtless of a style of performance which plays Schumann's 'Traumerei' on the great organ diapasons. He remarked simply that it reminded him of a hippopotamus wearing a clover leaf in his mouth."

A member of one of his classes at Columbia, finding more unoccupied space on the page of his book, after finishing the exercise, filled up the vacancy with rests. When his book was returned the page was covered with corrections—all except these bars of rests, which were inclosed in a red line and marked:

"This is the only correct passage in the exercise."—Youth's Companion.

INDIANS WHO LIVE HIGH

Oklahoma Osages Have Received More than Five Million Dollars in Ten Years.

WHERE THE MONEY GOES.

Redskins Spend It on Dainties to Eat, Gaudy Blankets, Fine Moccasins and Hack Rides.

The 2,230 members of the Osage Indian tribe during the ten years that closed with the federal fiscal year last month received the exact sum of $5,400,669.04 from annuities on their moneys in the United States treasury, from oil and gas royalties, and from pastured lands rented to Texas cattlemen, a Kansas City Times dispatch from Pawhuska, Okla., says. The share of each tribal citizen was $2,421.82, but that does not include all the sources of income enjoyed by the Osages, many of whom "squatted" on tribal lands, and rented them for farming purposes, the income going to the squatter claimant.

In addition, nearly every Osage planted a small field of corn for his own use. Their simple mode of life should have made unnecessary the expenditure of any considerable portion of their income. There were families whose total annual receipts in cash ran from $1,500 to $2,000. Yet the statement is made that nine out of every ten of the Osages "spent their money like princes" and didn't save a cent.

Has the "Hack Habit."

How much fun did the Osages get out of their five and a half million dollars, and into whose pockets did it finally fall? are questions that naturally suggest themselves. An Osage's main idea of fun is something to eat, and the wearing of gaudy blankets and buckskin moccasins. He will go against any game that tickles his vanity or imagination. He cannot withstand the temptation offered by the traders in piling their windows full of good things to eat, and in lining their counters with gaudy ornaments for personal adornment; he buys to the limit of his credit, and is still ready to buy when that is exhausted.

The Osage is a pleasure-loving chap, and is mainly responsible for the fact that Pawhuska is known as "the best hack town of its size in the United States." It has a population of about 3,000 and maintains with profit eleven hacks, as good as may be found in Kansas City. There is an all-night hack stand in Kihekah avenue, the principal thoroughfare.

Several hundred Osages live at the "Indian village," a mile or so north of Pawhuska, and many times a day a hack driver may be seen flying along with a big Osage reclining in grandeur in the carriage, surrounded by his squaw and several children, on his way to the village or coming to Pawhuska. The Osage enjoys cushioned luxury and greatly prefers it to jolting along in an Indian wagon drawn by two ponies that do not fear the whip.

The hack habit has spread from the Indian to the white residents of Pawhuska and commonly men jump into a hack to ride only a block or two and flip a quarter to the driver with the greatest nonchalance.

DISGUISES FAILED.

Experiences of Emperor Napoleon I. at a Masked Ball.

The Emperor Napoleon I. once announced to his valet that he intended on a certain evening going to a ball at the Italian embassy and requested that complete costumes should be sent in advance. The valet, Constant, obeyed and attended his imperious master and commenced to dress him in a manner which might, had the Emperor followed the valet's advice, have defied detection. Constant had some trouble with Napoleon over one or two minor matters, but when it came to changing his top boots for shoes the Emperor absolutely refused.

Going into the ballroom, Napoleon at once relapsed into his accustomed attitude and, wishing to engage a lady in conversation, approached her with his hands behind his back. To his first question she prefaced her reply with "sire." Turning away abruptly, he went back to his room and said: "You were right, Constant. I have been recognized. Give me another costume and shoes this time."

The valet redressed his master and warned him to keep his hands at his side. No sooner had he entered the room the second time than once more he relapsed into his natural attitude. This time a lady addressed him, "Sire, you are recognized." Once more the Emperor left the room in disgust.

Returning to his room, Napoleon was disguised for the third time. His toilet complete, he went back to the ballroom, which he entered as if it were a barrack room, pushing and swaggering. He was at once detected, and some one whispered to him, "Your majesty is recognized." Another disappointment and another change, still with the same result, and in the end the Emperor left the embassy convinced that it was impossible to conceal his identity.

Jimmie giggled when the teacher read the story of the Roman who swam across the Tiber three times before breakfast.

"No, sir," answered Jimmie; "but I wondered why he didn't make it four and get back to the side his clothes were on."—Success.

MUSHROOM POISONING.

Mortality Caused by the Deadly Amanita in Many Countries.

The "white or deadly amanita" is the cause of the greatest number of the cases of mushroom intoxication, if we include in this group many species known by various names in different localities. The fungi are usually eaten by ignorant individuals, who gather what they find in the woods and consume them either raw or after thorough cooking. A small amount of the fresh material is sufficient to cause profound illness, with fatal outcome, so potent is the poison contained in its meshes, and the raw plant seems usually more toxic than the cooked specimens. Prof. W. H. Ford says in Science two or three "deadly amanitas" suffice to bring on disastrous results. The extreme toxicity of this species illustrates the dangerous consequences which the admixture of two or three specimens to a dish of edible mushrooms entails.

Following the consumption of the fungi there is a period of six to fifteen hours during which no symptoms of poisoning are shown by the victims. This corresponds to the period of incubation of other intoxications or infections. The first sign of trouble is sudden pain of the greatest intensity in the abdomen, accompanied by vomiting, thirst and choleriac diarrhoea with mucous and bloody stools. The latter symptom is by no means constant. The pain continues in paroxysms. The patients rapidly lose strength and flesh, their complexion assuming a peculiar yellow tone. After three to four days in children and six to eight in adults the victims sink into a profound coma from which they cannot be roused and death soon ends the fearful and useless tragedy. Convulsions rarely if ever occur. The majority of individuals poisoned by the "deadly amanita" die, the mortality varying from 60 to 100 per cent in various accidents, but recovery is not impossible when small amounts of the fungus are eaten, especially if the stomach be very promptly emptied, either naturally or artificially.

There have been many cases of phalloides intoxication reported in Italy, France, Germany and England, and fatalities from this cause in Canada and the United States are not uncommon. For several years I have collected newspaper accounts of toadstool poisoning and I should estimate that twelve to fifteen deaths occur annually from this species alone. The most horrible of all epidemics ever reported occurred in France at the Orphanage of St. Louis, near Pont de la Maye, Gironde, where eleven children died from one meal of amanita phalloides gathered by the ignorant attendants.

M'KEE RANKIN MISSED IT.

Turned Down an Opportunity to Get Westinghouse Millions for $500.

McKee Rankin's favorite poem is "Opportunity," the sonnet which stands as the monument to John J. Ingalls. When Rankin was in the heyday of his success as an actor a youth offered him an interest in an invention for $500, the New York Press says. The young man was in sore need of the money; he had sublime faith in his invention, and he wanted that $500 to cover his patents. He once had met Rankin, and now turned to him as the only man he knew with more than his shirt on his back. Rankin wasted no time on the youth. The young man was not discouraged by the first visit, but came again the next night, and the next, and wound up by pestering the actor until orders were issued to keep him out of the theater.

Twenty years rolled around. Rankin happened to be in Chicago. He had waned in his popularity as an actor. Age was crowding him and the future looked black. A bellboy entered his room and said a friend wished to see him, but that he refused to give his name. "Anybody's welcome," said Rankin, "show him up." A big, broad-shouldered man with the mark of prosperity on him walked into the room. "Do you remember me, Mr. Rankin?" asked the caller. "I can't say that I do," replied Rankin. "Well, do you remember that crazy young fellow twenty years ago with his air brake invention and the way he was put for $500?" Rankin sat up straight. "Why, yes, I remember; what about him?" "Oh, nothing, only I'm that young fellow, and I just thought I'd drop in any say hello. I'll bet you don't remember my name." "I've got to confess I don't," said Rankin. "Here's my card, then," said the visitor. Rankin took the card and read: "George Westinghouse."

Practical Theory.

"Pa, here's a piece of poetry that says something about a 'moated grange.' What is a 'moated grange,' pa?"

"Lemme look at it. I guess that must be a misprint for 'garage.' A moated garage is one that's designed for motors. That's it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

The Ballinger-Pinchot Decision.

The most earnest supporter of the Roosevelt policy of conservation will not dissent from President Taft's decision in the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy that the policy must be carried out under the limitations of the law. If every step taken to preserve our natural resources is not within the law and buttressed by legal authority, promoters who would monopolize them have good precedent for going outside of the law to obtain possession of them.

The history of the Interior Department in its dealings with the public lands is marked by many scandals similar to that which President Taft has just closed. The rapacity of land grabbers has too often been satisfied through the connivance of dishonest officials, and honest officials have been vilified by disappointed spoliators. The decision of President Taft, after thorough inquiry, that Secretary Ballinger's course was directed by law is a welcome vindication of an official who performed his duty as he saw it.

The water power, the timber and the deposits of coal which still belong to the government are gifts of nature for use by the American people. The government does the best it can with them when it facilitates their use under conditions which keep them as far as possible out of the hands of monopoly. The Interior Department, the Forestry Bureau and the Conservation Commission will be in perpetual hot water if more is attempted.

The President's silent verdict upon Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot is that in the matters leading to his controversy with the Secretary of the Interior he was animated by an excess of zeal. The fact seems to be that he was carrying out the Roosevelt idea too literally for practical results. By expressing, unofficially, the desire that Mr. Pinchot go on with his work the President bridges a chasm that seemed to be opening between the Roosevelt and the Taft policies.—St. Louis Republic.

Democracy's Clear Call.

There was nothing startling in President Taft's warning at Winona that if the nation wanted low tariff it would have to look to the Democratic party for it.

Mr. Taft merely voiced—though his apologists are blaming him for it—a prevailing sentiment throughout the West. The Republican party's failure to keep its tariff reduction pledges has turned the eyes of American consumers toward a congress that will not merely be pledged to low tariff, but will keep the pledge.

President Taft admits, in express terms, that certain portions of his party's pledge are unredeemed. Lower wool duties, for instance. In the next breath he says that the reason for this failure was because the "solidarity" of his party would have been wrecked by the exercise of his veto power.

Republicans first and the interests of American consumers second place!

Can Mr. Taft, or anyone else, complain if the West proceeds to roll up a congressional majority that will stand for Americanism first, and the interests of the Republican party last?

Is there not immediate justification for a Congress that will war on special privileges in the form of unequal tariff schedules, regardless of the immediate effect on the fortunes of any political party?

President Taft has himself sounded the bugle note that gives a clear call to Democracy.—Chicago Journal.

Opening the Taft Eyes.

If President Taft has deluded himself with the idea that his official indorsement of the Aldrich-Taft tariff bill would sway sentiment of his part in the West, his experience in Iowa must have opened his eyes.

He was received with courteous hospitality due to his high office. But never before has a Republican President received so chilly a welcome in this always Republican State. All enthusiasm was reserved for Cummins and Dolliver, insurgents whom the President had openly rebuked in his Winona speech.

Nothing could be more plain than that Republicans of Iowa are solidly backing their representatives in defiance to Aldrich and his dupes. In attempting to impeach the Republicanism of the insurgents President Taft merely has succeeded in placing himself outside the breastworks.

Possibly by the time the President completes his swing around the circle he will realize the truth of Senator Cummins' assertion that the fight for an honest tariff has only begun.

The Result.

The Redemption of David Corson

CHAPTER II.

At the moment when Stephen was sounding the horn to summon the young mystic to his supper, a promiscuous crowd of loafers with chairs tilted against the wall of the village tavern received a shock. They heard the tinkle of bells in the distance, and looking in the direction of this unusual sound, saw a team of splendid coal-black horses dash round a corner and whirl a strange vehicle to the door of the inn.

There were two extraordinary figures on the front seat of the wagon. The driver was a sturdy, thick-set man whose enormous moustache suggested a crow with outstretched wings. As if to emphasize the ferocious aspect lent him by this hairy canopy which completely concealed his mouth, Nature had duplicated it in miniature by brows meeting above his nose and spreading themselves, plume-like, over a pair of eyes which gleamed so brightly that they could be felt, although they were so deep-set that they could scarcely be seen.

This fierce and buccaneerish person summoned the dozing hostler in a coarse, imperative voice, flung him the reins, sprang from his seat, and assisted his companion to alight. She gave him her hand with an air of utter indifference, bestowed upon him neither smile nor thanks, and dropped to the ground with a light flutter like a bird. Turning instantly toward the tavern, she ascended the steps of the porch under a fusillade of glances of astonishment and admiration. Young and beautiful, dressed in a picturesque and brilliant Spanish costume, she carried herself with the ease and dignity of a princess, and looked straight past the staring crowd. Her great, dreamy eyes did not seem to note them.

When she and her companion had entered the hall and closed the door behind them, every tilted chair came down to the floor with a bang, and many voices exclaimed in concert, "Who is she?" Curiosity was satisfied at 8 o'clock in the evening, for at that hour Doctor Paracelsus Aesculapius, as he fantastically called himself, opened the doors of his traveling apothecary shop and exposed his "universal panecea" for sale, while at the same time, "Pepeeta, the Queen of Fortune Tellers," entered her booth and spread out upon a table the paraphernalia by which she undertook to discover the secrets of the future.

When the evening's work was ended, Pepeeta at once retired; but the doctor entered the bar-room, followed by a curious and admiring crowd. He was in a happy and expansive frame of mind, for he had done a "land office" business in this frontier village which he was now for the first time visiting.

He looked over the crowd with an inclusive superiority and waved his hand with an inclusive gesture. The motley throng of loafers sidled up to the bar with a deprecatory and automatic movement. They took their glasses, clinked them, nodded to their entertainer, muttered incoherent toasts and drank his health. The delighted landlord, feeling it incumbent upon him to break the silence, offered the friendly observation: "S-s-see you s-s-tutter. S-s-stutter a little m-m-my own self."

"Shake!" responded the doctor, who was in too complacent a mood to take offense, and the worthies grasped hands.

"Don't know any w-w-way to s-s-stop it, do you?" asked the landlord.

"No, I d-d-don't; t-t-tried everything. Even my 'universal p-p-panacea' won't do it, and what that can't do can't be d-d-done. Incurable d-d-disease. Get along all right when I go slow like this; but when I open the throttle, get all b-b-balled up. Bad thing for my business. Give any man a thousand d-d-dollars that'll cure me," the quack replied, slapping his trousers pocket as if there were millions in it.

"Co-co-couldn't go q-q-quite as high as that; but wouldn't mind a hu-hundred," responded the landlord, cordially.

"Tell you what it is, b'-b-boys," said the quack, "if it wasn't for this impediment in my s-s-speech, I wouldn't need to work more'n about another y-y-year!"

"How's that?" asked someone in the crowd.

"C-c-cause if I could talk as well as I c-c-can think, I could make a fortune 'side of which old John Jacob Astor's would look like a p-p-penny savings b-b-bank!"

"You could?"

"If I can find a man that can do the t-talking (I mean real talk, you know; talk a crowd blind as b-b-bats), I've got something better'n a California g-g-gold mine."

"Better get Dave Corson," said the village wag from the rear of the crowd, and up went a wild shout of laughter.

"Who's D-D-Dave Corson?" asked the doctor.

"Quaker preacher. Young feller 'bout 20 years old."

"Can he t-t-talk?"

"Talk! He kin talk a mule into a trottin' hoss in less'n three minutes."

"He's my man!" exclaimed the doctor, at which the crowd laughed again.

"What are you laughing at?" he asked, turning upon them savagely, his loud voice and threatening manner frightening those who stood nearest, so that they instinctively stepped back a pace or two.

"No offense, Doc," said one of them; "but you couldn't get him. He's pious."

"Pious! What do I care?"

"Well, these'here pious Quakers are stiff in their notions. But you kin jedge fer yourself 'bout his talkin, fer there's goin' ter be an appinted Quaker meetin' to-morrow night, and he'll speak. You kin go an' listen, if you want to."

"I'll be there, boys, and d-d-don't you forget it. I'll hook him! Never saw anything I couldn't buy if I had a little of the p-p-proper stuff about me."

"I say, Doc, that daughter of yours knows her biz when it comes to telling fortunes," ventured a young dandy, whose head had been turned by Pepeeta's beauty.

"D-d-daughter!" snapped the quack, turning sharply upon him; "she's not my daughter, she's my wife!"

In order to comprehend the relationship of this strangely mated pair, we must go back five or six years to a certain day when this same Doctor Aesculapius rode slowly down the main street of a small city in Western Pennsylvania, and then out along a rugged country highway. A couple of miles brought him to the camp of a band of gypsies.

Around a campfire was a picturesque group of persons, all of whom, with a single exception, vanished at the approach of the stranger. The man who stood his ground was a truly sinister being. He was tall, thin and angular; his clothing was scant and ragged, his face bronzed with exposure to the sun.

"Good morning, Baltasar," said the visitor.

The gypsy acknowledged his salutation with a frown.

"I wish to sell this horse," the traveler added, without appearing to notice his cold reception.

The gypsy swept his eye over the animal and shook his head.

"If you will not buy, perhaps you will trade," the traveler said.

"Come," was the laconic response, and so saying the gypsy turned towards the forest which lay just beyond the camp. The "doctor" obeyed. A moment later he found himself in a sequestered spot where there was an improvised stable; and a dozen or more horses glancing up from their feed whinnied a welcome.

A little rivulet lay across their path, and up from the margin of it where she had been gathering water cresses there sprang a young girl, who cast a startled glance at him, then bounded swiftly toward a tent and vanished through the opening. This keen admirer of horses was equally susceptible to the charms of female beauty. So swift an apparition would have bewildered rather than illumined the mind of an ordinary man. But the quack was not an ordinary man. He was endowed with a certain rude power of divination which enabled him to see in a single instant, by swift intuition, more than the average man discovers by an hour of reasoning. By this natural clairvoyance he saw at a glance that this face of exquisite delicacy could no more have been coined in a gypsy camp than a fine cameo could be cut in an Indian wigwam. He knew that all gypsies were thieves, and that these were Spanish gypsies. What was more natural than that he should conclude with inevitable logic that this child had been stolen from people of good if not of noble blood!

"Baltasar!" he said.

The gypsy turned.

"You are a girl-thief as well as a horse-thief. You stole this girl from the family of a Spanish nobleman. I am the representative of this family and have followed your trail for years. You thought I had come to get the horse. You were mistaken; it was the girl!"

"Perdita!" exclaimed the gypsy, taken completely off his guard.

"Lost indeed," responded the quack, scarcely able to conceal his pride in his own astuteness. And then he added slowly: "She must be a burden to you, Baltasar. You evidently never have been able or never have dared to take her back and claim the ransom which you expected. I will pay you for her and take her from your hands. It is the child I want and not vengeance. What will you take for her?"

The doctor drew a leather wallet from his pocket and held it up tantalizingly. Its influence was decisive.

"Pepeeta! Pepeeta!" called the gypsy.

Out of the door of the tent she came, her eyes fixed upon the ground, and her fingers picking nervously at the tinsel strings which fastened her bodice.

"Gif me ze money and take her."

The doctor counted out the gold, and then approached the child. For the first time in his life he experienced an emotion of reverence. There was something about her beauty, her helplessness and his responsibility that made a new appeal to his heart.

Yielding to the gentle pressure of his hand, she permitted herself to be led away. Not a good-bye was said. The doctor lifted the child upon the horse's back and climbed into the saddle. The beautiful child trembled; she also wept. She was parting from those whose lives were base and cruel; but they were the only human beings that she knew. She was leaving a wagon and a tent, but it was the only home that she could remember.

To have a fellow-being completely in our power makes us either utterly cruel or utterly kind, and all that was gentle in that great rough nature went out in a rush of tenderness toward the little creature who thus suddenly became absolutely dependent upon his compassion. After they had ridden a little way, he began in his rough fashion to try to comfort her.

"Don't cry, Pepeeta! You ought to be thankful that you have got out of the clutches of those villains. You could not have been worse off, and you may be a great deal better! They were not always kind to you, were they? I shouldn't wonder if they beat you sometimes! But you will never be beaten any more. You shall have a nice little pony, and a cart, and flowers, and pretty clothes, and everything that little girls like. I don't know what they are, but whatever they are you shall have them. So don't cry any more! What a pretty name Pepeeta is! It sounds like music when I say it. I have got the toughest name in the world myself. It's a regular jawbreaker—Doctor Paracelsus Aesculapius! What do you think of that, Pepeeta! But then you need not call me by the whole of it! You can just call me Doctor, for short. Now, look at me just once, and give me a pretty smile. Let me see those big black eyes! No? You don't want to? Well, that's all right. I won't bother you. But I want you to know that I love you, and that you are never going to have any more trouble as long as you live."

These were the kindest words the child had ever had spoken to her, or at least the kindest she could remember. They fell on her ears like music and awakened gratitude and love in her heart. She ceased to sigh, and before the ride to town was ended had begun to feel a vague sense of happiness.

The next few years were full of strange adventures for these singular companions. The quack had discovered certain clues to the past history of the child whom he had thus adopted, and was firmly persuaded that she belonged to a noble family. He had made all his plans to take her to Spain and establish her identity in the hope of securing a great reward. But just as he was about to execute this scheme, he was seized by a disease which prostrated him for many months, and threw him into a nervous condition in which he contracted the habit of stammering. On his recovery from his long sickness he found himself stripped of everything he had accumulated; but his shrewdness and indomitable will remained, and he soon began to rebuild his shattered fortune.

During all these ups and downs, Pepeeta was his inseparable and devoted companion. The admiration which her childish beauty excited in his heart had deepened into affection and finally into love. When she reached the age of 16 or 17 years, he proposed to her the idea of marriage. She knew nothing of her own heart, and little about life, but had been accustomed to yield implicit obedience to his will. She consented and the ceremony was performed by a Justice of the Peace in the city of Cincinnati, a year or so before their appearance in the Quaker village. An experience so abnormal would have perverted, if not destroyed her nature, had it not contained the germs of beauty and virtue implanted at her birth. They were still dormant, but not dead; they only awaited the sun and rain of love to quicken them into life.

The quack had coarsened with the passing years, but Pepeeta, withdrawing into the sanctuary of her soul, living a life of vague dreams and half-conscious aspirations after something, she know not what, had grown even more gentle and submissive. As she did not yet comprehend life, she did not protest against its injustice or its incongruity. The vulgar people among whom she lived, the vulgar scenes she saw, passed across the mirror of her soul without leaving permanent impression. She performed the coarse duties of her life in a perfunctory manner. It was her body and not her soul, her will and not her heart which were concerned with them. What that soul and that heart really were, remained to be seen.

CANCER AMONG FISH.

Scientists Trying to Discover if It Can Be Communicated.

The discovery that cancer is a very common disease with many kinds of fish, and especially brook trout, has been made.

Dr. Harvey R. Gaylord, head of the Buffalo State Cancer Laboratory, announced Sunday that scientists connected with that institution are now conducting a new line of experimentation to discover whether or not cancer is communicated to human beings by the fish they eat or whether the water of streams is infected by the cancer germ from the fish.

This new discovery on which the cancer experts are working may give a clew to the manner in which cancer is communicated to the human system. Heretofore cancer research had been conducted chiefly along the lines of a hunt for a cure. The disease was found to be most prevalent in mice and rats, and most of the experiments have been performed with these animals as subjects.

While it is an established fact that cancer is a common disease among fish, there is no certainty that it is the source of infection of human beings. Dr. Gaylord said:

"There is no certainty that cancer comes from fish. We are conducting a vigorous line of experiments, however, to find out if it does. These experiments have not gone far enough yet to warrant giving any opinion on the matter. The discovery that cancer exists among fish was made by a French scientist. A study of fish has shown that the disease is quite common among this species of animal life. It is found that the gills of fish are the part affected. The disease is found in many varieties of fresh-water fish, and many sea fish have also been found which are so diseased."

While Dr. Gaylord was quite guarded in his statements as to the effect of this discovery and the result of the experiments which are now being carried on, it is known that officials of the State Forest, Fish and Game Commission are much interested. Infected fish are now furnished to the cancer laboratory in this city by the State hatcheries for these experiments.

The fish experiments are being conducted along two lines—first, to see whether the fish infect the water in which they live, and, second, whether the cancer germs are entirely destroyed by the heat of cooking.—New York Tribune.

A Case for Sympathy.

Two matrons of a certain western city whose respective matrimonial ventures did not in the first instance prove altogether satisfactory, met at a woman's club one day, when the first matron remarked:

"Hattie, I met your 'ex,' dear old Tom, the day before yesterday. We talked much of you."

"Is that so?" asked the other matron. "Did he seem sorry when you told him of my second marriage?"

"Indeed, he did; and said so most frankly!"

"Honest?"

"Honest! He said he was extremely sorry, though, he said, he didn't know the man personally."—Lippincott's.

Proof He Was "Dazed."

He had pleaded the "detained at the office" and the "balancing the books" excuses so often that they had become transparent, so when he arrived home late on a recent evening he determined to lean on the truth.

"Theodore, you've been drinking!" said his indignant wife.

"Selina, m' dear, I cannot tell a lie—I—" stammered the delinquent.

"Then you're even more intoxicated than I thought. Go to bed."

We'd Be Mad Enough Ourselves.

Editor—What was that man so raving mad about?

Assistant Editor—Oh, he's just been married and in the notice where the reporter wrote "joy was written all over the bridegroom's countenance," the printer got it "jay."—Boston Transcript.

Women's Interests

Woman's Place in Business.

The non-recognition of woman's place in business life is still prevalent, says Miss Harriet Richards in the Bookkeeper. Many a business man looks upon the feminine element of his office force, from the telephone girl to his private secretary (and what on earth would he do without her?), as a necessary nuisance, and considers the position that woman to-day holds in American business life an erroneous one. Nevertheless, the fact remains that over six million women and girls in these United States are self-supporting, and with only nine exceptions they are engaged in every occupation in which men are engaged. Since this is a fact, who shall say it is wrongly so?

If the feminine element is a necessity in the home, where his majesty throws off the cares of the day and is ready for rest and recreation; may it not be conceded that there are those qualities in women that are necessary as a balance to those masculine qualities which are continually in action in the business world?

It has been said that "women are not all fools, although men seem to expect them to be, very often." Woman has an intuitive perception that enables her to see into a thing more quickly than a man, to see at once results other than those satisfactory to selfish desire; she has greater foresight, greater patience, a better sense of harmony, of proportion and of order. The French recognize these facts, and to-day in France the wife is not only made familiar with her husband's business, but she has become a most helpful assistant to him in that connection.

Empire and Bolero.

Bolero jackets are once again striving to regain their old-time popularity and are shown frequently on some of the newest models. A late importation in water green satin built on empire lines has the jacket effect beautifully braided with silk soutache in shade matching the material. The high grade is braided in design directly in front and edged top and bottom with a single row of braid.

Nerves Dangerous for Business Women.

The business woman who lets a reprimand for a mishap reduce her to tears or a state of nervousness that utterly unfits her for work for hours would be more efficient if she could philosophically put such things aside with the mental reservation, "It's done and can't be undone; I'll try to prevent its happening again," and let it go at that.

The person who can take a disappointment stoically, who can get the right perspective and see that in a week or month or a year it will be a little thing, though just now it seems big, has a help along life's highway that will considerably brighten dark places.

It isn't meant that we should be careless or indifferent. It is meant that one should put a right valuation on the things that disturb one's serenity. It isn't meant that in great trouble we can summon philosophy to take out the sting. But for the trifles, the inconsequential things, it is a most useful armor.

How to Be Human.

Success in human relationships means the possession, to some extent at least, of the power so naively shown by the little girl who walked with her mother in the park. She entered so spontaneously and so entirely into the life about her, she felt so intimately and so vividly the experiences of the trees and the flowers, the birds and the squirrels, that she temporarily lost the consciousness of her own personality, and as she skipped about came running to her mother, crying, "Oh, mother, mother, isn't it enjoying it self!"—Harper's Bazar.

Wedding Ring Curiosities.

The idea that the wedding ring should be worn on the third finger of the left hand because "a nerve connects this finger with the heart," is, says the writer of an article in Woman's Life, of Roman origin, but, oddly enough, it is not continued on the continent as in England, for in France, Belgium and Germany, and most other European nations, the "engagement ring" finger is the third finger of the left hand, while the "wedding ring" finger is the third finger of the right hand.

Not American Women.

Occasionally some benighted individual ventures to repeat the silly assertion that American women lack the poise and feminine dignity that characterize their sex in European countries.

Anyone who cherishes such a delusion should read the comments of European newspapers on the conduct of women during the visit of King Edward to Marienbad. In their insane ambition to secure some souvenir of royalty scores of well-dressed and apparently respectable women followed the monarch so closely that the police had to interfere. They even crowded around him in the restaurants, fighting to snatch a cigar stub, a crumb of bread, or even the matches that he had used to light his cigars.

Just imagine American women participating in such disgraceful proceedings! American women may not be controlled by inherited respect for long outgrown conventions. Few of them, however, are lacking in ability so to conduct themselves as to command the respect of the most distinguished visitor, be he President or King.—Chicago Journal.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Folds and fichus over the shoulders are quite a feature of evening gowns.

Sleeveless coats with a color contrasting with the gown under them are in growing favor.

The scarf which matches the gown is becoming one of the familiar features for the light wrap.

The winter promises to be a season of extra long, narrow coats over plain, striped or checked gowns.

A gay Beau Brummel frill at the throat transforms the tailored suit into something dainty and feminine.

Black embroidery upon brown is smart when the brown is not too dark to afford a contrast with the black.

The coarser weaves of tussore, which have the preference just now, look at a distance like a piece of rough canvas.

One of the oddities of the season is the introduction of the metallic and spangle effects among the cottons and linens.

Among the popular fabrics are the new two-tone changeable satins, the face being of one color and the back of another.

Dog collars of velvet are especially pretty when embroidered in tiny buds and flowers or a spray of foliage, in natural colors.

The wide shirtwaists, striped with color matching the gowns with which they are worn, are in great favor with the girls just now.

Yellow is more to be seen this season than for years. It is used not only for sashes or collars or tapestry finishes, but entire frocks are made of it.

The fad for stenciling has extended as far as the children's wardrobe, and mothers of young children are decorating the hems of skirts, yokes, collars, etc., with this artistic work.

Unconscious Worry.

A great many people worry unconsciously, says Success. They don't understand why they are so tired in the morning, why their sleep was so disturbed and troubled.

This mental disturbance is often caused by the habit of taking things too seriously, carrying too much weight of responsibility. Everywhere we see people who take life too seriously. Most of us are like the motorman, who not only starts and stops the car and tries to keep from running over people, but also feels tremendous anxiety and responsibility about the motive power.

One of the most helpful lessons life can impart is that which shows us how to do our work as well as it can be done and then let principle take care of the result. How often have we been amazed to find things come out much better than we anticipated, to find that the great unseen wilderness of trial and tribulation into the open has guided our life ship through the fog of difficulties and sorrow, through storms of hardships and losses, safely into port.

The pilot does not lose heart when he can not see his way. He turns to that mysterious compass which sees as plainly in the fog and guides as faithfully in the tempest as when the sea is like glass.

Will Test the Law.

A test case of the law in Ohio that forbids a married woman to teach will probably be made in the case of Mrs. Merritt Mason, of Helena. She made a contract to teach before she was married, and when she took unto herself a husband she was told that the contract was void. She declares that a teacher can only be discharged for certain reasons, and having a husband is not one of them.

Home-Made Rug.

For a useful house rug, cut burlap 4 inches wide, yard long, unravel both sides for 1½ inches, fold, and sew the latter. Take a piece of burlap the size you want the rug. Begin to sew the burlap in the center, one of the strips that is unraveled, turn the ends up, and sew in a circle to the square piece of burlap until the burlap is filled. It can be sewed in any shape you would like. Dye it some nice color.

The Work That Never Done

Use salt water applied with a coarse brush to clean willow furniture. Dry well.

A cloth dipped into methylated spirits will be found useful in cleaning brown shoes.

To bleach handkerchiefs, after washing let them soak over night in water in which a bit of cream of tartar has been dissolved.

Try keeping sewing implements handy in the kitchen for dressing fowls—strong thread, cord, a thimble, a needle and scissors.

Moistened cream of tartar will remove iron rust. Grass stains in white goods should be saturated with paraffin and put out in the sun.

Cut sheets of tinfoil and place under the flower vase doilies and you will have no trouble with any dampness affecting the best polished furniture.

To clean embossed brass make a solution of one ounce of oxalic acid and one pint of soft water. Apply it with a soft brush and polish with chamois.

Don't rinse laces in blued water under a mistaken notion that it will improve the color. It won't. Rinse in skimmed milk, which will give a soft, creamy tint.

Fancy baskets in colors can be cleaned with water the same as any basket, but the colors are less liable to run if cold water and naptha soap are used. Lined baskets can be cleaned in this manner.

To improve the appearance of rusty black lace, soak it in vinegar and water—two tablespoonfuls of vinegar to a pint of cold water—then rinse it in cold coffee and iron it, while still damp, between flannel.

In putting down linoleum or oilcloth have strips of molding nailed above the linoleum where it comes to the baseboard. This prevents dust from getting underneath and also preserves the edges from moisture under the floor covering.

A linoleum may be freshened perceptibly if given a coat of linseed oil and paraffin. Boil the oil and wax together and apply, while still hot, with a brush. Use only enough to cover the surface, and when finished wipe it off dry with a cloth.

Health and Beauty Hints.

To draw a boil to a head peel the skin from a boiled egg, wet and apply at once.

Ringworms disappear when painted a few times with iodine. Repeat application if required.

Bind the white of an egg over burns or scalds. It will form a coating like varnish and give instant relief.

If inflammatory rheumatism is not of long standing bathe the affected parts with sweet oil and saltpeter—an ounce of the latter to a pint of oil. It is very effective.

When giving castor oil take a small tumbler and squeeze into it a tablespoonful of orange juice; next pour in the oil, then add more juice. The oil will form a globule in the center of the juice and can be swallowed without being detected.

Soaking the feet night and morning in hot water for five minutes at least will do much toward relieving the pain. A mixture of alum, rock salt and borax in even quantities will be helpful in extreme cases.

A German woman who suffered from neuralgia was cured by fasting, and hence in her opinion it is food and not money that is the root of all evil. Medical authorities are already countenancing hunger cures for different maladies.

A pleasant and refreshing mouth wash may be formed by mixing in a pint of distilled or otherwise pure water, two teaspoonfuls of prepared borax and a teaspoonful of camphor. Keep it tightly corked and shake well before using.

Many persons find that a little peroxide of hydrogen brushed over the skin immediately freckles appear has a marvelous power of dispelling them. One should, however, vary this treatment by applying some fatty cream, for the drug tends to wither the skin, and some skins it irritates greatly.

Blouse of Pongee.

Here is a model for blouse especially well adapted for pongee. The little bands might be Persian or Chinese embroidery, and the frog buttons wood brown. Either brown silk or ribbon velvet in same shade would make a pretty collar.

Girls to Wear Awnings.

The smartly dressed girl, instead of carrying an umbrella to protect her new hat, now stretches an awning over it. This contrivance she can make in soft rubberized silk, in attractive colors. It is to be hooked around the brim, and around the crown there are draw strings which shirr it up into a soft drapery effect, which, topped off with a bow, gives a very graceful effect.

Basting Goods.

In basting the goods on the lining of jackets and waists pull the lining a trifle at the waist line. Then when basting the waist together stitch the goods until the fullness in the lining is gone. This will make a snug fit and there will never be any wrinkles at the waist line.

One Teacher Honored.

To Clean Graniteware.

Where mixtures have burned on them, half fill the vessel with cold water, add a generous pinch of washing soda, heat slowly to boiling point, then empty, when dish easily may be cleaned.

Old Favorites

Katie Lee and Willie Gray.

Two brown heads with tossing curls,
Red lips shutting over pearls,
Bare feet white and wet with dew,
Two eyes black and two eyes blue;
Little boy and girl were they,
Katie Lee and Willie Gray.

They were standing where a brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,
Flashed its silver, and thick ranks
Of green willow fringed the banks;
Half in thought and half in play,
Katie Lee and Willie Gray.

They had cheeks like cherries red;
He was taller—'most a head;
She, with arms like wreaths of snow,
Swung a basket to and fro;
As she loitered, half in play,
Chattering to Willie Gray.

"Pretty Katie," Willie said—
And there came a dash of red
Through the brownness of his cheek—
"Boys are strong and girls are weak.
And I'll carry, so I will,
Katie's basket up the hill."

Katie answered, with a laugh,
"You shall carry only half."
And then, tossing back her curls,
"Boys are weak as well as girls."
Do you think that Katie guesses
Half the wisdom she expressed?

Men are only boys grown tall,
Hearts don't change much, after all;
And when, long years from that day,
Katie Lee and Willie Gray
Stood again beside the brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,

Is it strange that Willie said,
While again a dash of red
Crossed the Brownness of his cheek,
"I am strong and you are weak;
Life is but a slippery steep,
Hung with shadows cold and deep.

"Will you trust me, Katie dear?
Walk beside me without fear.
May I carry, if I will,
All your burdens up the hill?"
And she answered with a laugh,
"No, but you may carry half."

Close beside the little brook,
Bending like a shepherd's crook,
Washing with its silver hands,
Late and early at the sands,
Is a cottage, where, to-day,
Katie lives with Willie Gray.

In a porch she sits, and lo!
Swings a basket to and fro,
Vastly different from the one
That she swung in years agone;
This is long, and deep, and wide,
And has—rockers at the side!

SERMONS AND SLEEP.

A Comforting Theory in Regard to Dozing in Church.

The French scientists are the most consoling people in the world. They are always working out some explanation that affords consolation. Here comes one with a theory about sleeping in churches that will be a relief to both pastor annd sleeper.

According to this French psychologist's theory, persons are inclined to "doze" in church because of the devout attention they pay to the services. "In endeavoring to fix every word in their minds they put themselves into a sort of trance. It is about the same as what is called self-hypnotism, and the more closely one follows the minister the more likely he is to find himself unable to remain awake.

For a good many years the pert paragraphers have had a great deal to say about church sleepers, and usually the preacher has gotten the worst of the argument. All manner of devices have been suggested by the humorists as aids to lengthy sermons, even to the placing of electric needles in the cushions to awaken the sleepers at the pressure of a button by the minister. But now that the inclination to slumber in church has been accounted for upon purely scientific grounds, the remedy for the evil will probably be abated in a practical way—perhaps by encouraging the employment of pastors who are incapable of holding one's attention at all.—Dayton News.

Futile Dieting.

The doctor's made me cut out pie and every kind of berries;
He tells me that I'll quickly die if I indulge in cherries;
I've had to give up cake and meat and all preserves and sauces;
A doc can be,
It seems to me,
The worst of all one's bosses.

I've had to put my pipe away and cease to smoke Havanas;
I may eat, if I like it, hay, but I must spurn bananas;
I must avoid all starchy foods, all stuff containing acid;
I have to strive
To keep alive
On nothing and be placid.

Yet I would not complain nor kick nor even view things gravely,
I'd deem it lucky to be sick, and bear
my troubles bravely,
If I were saving anything while suffering privations;
But all I make
They blithely take
For furnishing my rations.

The New Milkman.

"Good-morning, madam," said the slender, solemn-faced man with the peculiarly unnatural looking hair. "I am introducing my new butter, which I sell at a much lower price than that charged by other refiner—I mean creameries."

"It has a strange smell," says the housewife, sniffing at the package. "It smells as if it had been close to coal oil."

"Petroleum, madam, is one of our greatest health-giving agents," explained the stranger. "Besides, when the butter gets old you can melt it and burn it in your lamp. Two pounds? Thank you, madam. We should all rejoice in doing good. Here are $10,000,000 for your husband to build a college with."

And the new milkman stepped blithely out of the yard.—Life.

A Mohammedan Evasion.

According to one of the tenets of the Mohammedan religion, it is a sin to make a picture of any living thing. The elaborate decorations of the palaces and mosques of the east are almost exclusively made up of ingeniously interlaced geometric designs, arabesques, or flowers, intermixed with sentences from the Koran.

There is a belief among Mussulmans that on the Day of Judgment Allah will demand that the artist who has made an image of a living thing shall endow that image with life, and that, failing to do this, he will be sent to perdition for his sin.

A traveler that had visited a mosque in Algiers found that the tiles with which the building was decorated were adorned with flights of birds. He expressed surprise at this, and asked if the command against such representation was a modern edict.

"Oh, no," answered the pious Algerian to whom he addressed the question. "These are not pictures of living birds."

"But they are painted as if they were flying," the other said in some astonishment.

"Yes," the Mussulman replied; "but do you not see that about the neck of each there is a fine black line? That is to show that the artist painted only dead birds, and the command of the Koran is not violated."

SPLINTERS.

Smiles, like beauty, are often only skin deep.

It is easy for the surveyor to see which way the land lies.

Bills—Why do you call her a dream? She is anything but pretty. Wills—I am too charitable to call her a nightmare.

It is human nature to make your circus posters bigger than your show.

Simpson—Do you believe in predestination? Sampson—Not on your life; the Republican party is good enough for me.

If every man had to practice what he preached there would be less preaching.

Boyce—You don't mean to say that you can get all the rest you want by staying at home during the summer? Joyce—Yes, my nextdoor neighbors always shut up their houses and go to the seashore or mountains.

BRIDGET'S BEAUTITUDES.

Blessed is the soapy water in which the starch is made.

Blessed is the stick of cinnamon put in with each can of pears.

Blessed is the lamp wick which is frayed at the lower end; it will give a better and stronger light.

Blessed is the milk put in the water when making mush for frying. It makes the mush a better brown.

Blessed is the trip to the window or back porch every few hours for a dozen long, deep breaths. It makes housework lighter.

Blessed is the piece of chamois skin kept for polishing the mirrors, best furniture, picture glass, etc. It leaves no lint.

A Taste for Red.

"We are all of us more or less creatures of habit," remarked Senator H. D. Money of Mississippi, "and there is no accounting for tastes. For instance, I observed while on a cruise through the West Indies that the natives of those islands insisted upon having red butter. All butter that is shipped to the West Indies must be colored a bright red. Red cravats, red coats and bright raiment of all kinds, find favor in the eyes of the natives of the West Indies. Our failure to recognize the whims and peculiarities of the natives of Central and South America and cater to them is the chief reason in my opinion why our trade in that section of the world has been of such slow growth. Our attitude for many years toward our neighbors to the south of us has been one of superiority; we would teach them what was proper for them to eat, wear, etc. Naturally they resented it. I am glad to say that of late our business men have taken a tumble to themselves, so to speak, and are trying seriously to compete for the South American trade by catering to the wishes and prejudices of the inhabitants.

Can't Learn in School

When the stomach is out of order or the bowels constipated, a feeling of drowsiness and inactivity comes over the body. The brain won't think, and the body won't work. If it is a child who suffers in this way, it naturally can't learn well in school, as it has no inclination for study. Give the child a dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you will soon find it wonderfully improved and ultimately cured. It is guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 39-1m

EVIDENCE IS CONCLUDED

The Celebrated Fred Griner Case Will Soon Be Decided by Judge Bretten.

PUBLIC AWAITS THE DECISION

With Much Anxiety—Six Weeks and One Day of Time Appropriated in Taking Evidence.

The evidence in the celebrated Fred Ginder drain case was concluded in the DeKalb circuit court Thursday morning after six weeks and one day had been consumed in the actual taking of evidence. The litigation has been one of the most bitterly fought and lengthy ever recorded in the annals of DeKalb county history and that the evidence has been submitted to Judge Bratten in its entirety has signalled relief among the participants in the legal battle. Courier readers will remember the issues in the case as finding inception subsequent to the filing of a petition by Fred Ginder for a drain, which was proposed to be constructed from a point near the boundary of Wilmington township, thence across Stafford township, and emptying into the St. Joe river. The construction of the drain, if ordered by the court, wil represent the expenditure of approximately $29,000, this estimate having been compiled by those conversant with the matter in the controversy. A general remonstrance has found expression in the litigation as have remonstrances from individuals and the case has, ere this time, assumed a deep seriousness among the principals and attorneys for both sides, according to the statement of Judge Bratton, have displayed much diligence in expediting the case with all possible haste, and the heated arguments upon admissability of evidence, erroneous objections and other unpleasant occurences which so often characterize such litigaations have not been in evidence. Attorneys have agreed that Judge Bratton is to set apart a day of the next term of court for the presentation of argument and special findings and meantime he will view the premises to gain personal knowledge of the feasibilty of the propoposed drain.—Auburn Courrier.

Foot Ball Game

Last Saturday the city team met the high school team. Both teams were certain of victory and a good hard game was witnessed by about one hundred spectators.

The game was called at 3:45, Capt. Murch winning the toss and receiving the ball, Capt. Parker taking the west goal, the high school team showed their form by the forwards, passes and trick plays, but could not make a yard through the line or around either ends. The city team made most of their gains by straight foot ball, Grube and Murch carrying for line plunges and Dannells going around the end for good gains. The right end of the city team tried a drop kick for goal and only missed by the fraction of a foot, the ball going over the north post.

The game ended without a score and time was called but twice for injuries, once when the high school's half back got a bad sprain in the wrist and again when the city's full back got a severe bump on the nose. Both players finished the game, however, without substitutes.

Time of halves 0:20 and 0:15.
Referee—Clarence Murch.

The carpenters are at work on a new porch around the residence of Mr. Reen on W. Oak street.

HIGH CLASS AND UP-TO-DATE

Is the Talent Which Has Been Secured By the Lecture Course Committee

We are pleased to announce that Butler is to have a lecture course again this year, and that the talent which has been secured is all strictly high-class and our people will be sure of getting their money's worth in each and every number.

The Fisher Shipp Co. is the first. Their date is Friday, Oct. 22. This company is composed of four people. Miss Fisher Shipp is a reader and piano soloist. Miss Alice Cary is a violinist. Mrs. Etta Heacock is the vocal soloist. Mr. Lloyd A. Loar is a "thoroughgoing musician." They are a company of concert artists and entertainers that will please everybody.

The next number is a lecture by Chas. H. Plattenburg. Mr. Plattenburg, while yet a young man, has been called back for return dates as often as five and six times. His lectures are a rare combination of wisdom, wit and pathos that never fails to please. His date is Nov. 16.

The next is the Apolo Quintette and Bell Ringers, a company of real artists, three men and two ladies, that make up a company that will be worth 50 cents to $1.00 to hear. The lecture course gives this entertainment to you for 25 cents if you buy a season ticket. This date is Dec. 11.

Dr. Edwin W. Lonborn is the next on the program. The lecture bureaus say he needs but one introduction, after his first he is not forgotten. Sometimes he is an historian, sometimes a poet, sometimes a scientist, often a humorist, but always an orator. His date is Jan. 14, 1910.

John L. Woodruff, an entertainer, is the last on the course. The lecture bureau says: "Mr. Woodruff entertains; and it must be remembered that it takes more than an impersonator to entertain, more than a good voice, more than good material, more than personality—it takes them all. It is with confidence that we introduce to you a man who is not a humorist, though he is humorous; not a face-maker, though an impersonator; not a wit, though he is witty; not a poet, though he is poetic—an artist of quality, a man well met." His date is March 30, 1910.

The committee will be out to sell tickets soon. Take tickets to supply your family. You cannot spend a few dollars to better purpose.

Church of Christ Items

L. L. Carpenter, the veteran dedicator, favored us with a call on Saturday of last week. During his lifetime he has dedicated about 750 churches and has raised over two millions of dollars for the liquidation of indebtedness incurred.

The ladies of the church take this means of expressing their appreciation for the kindness shown in making their chicken dinner a success.

The service on Lord's day morning will be the last until after our vacation. In the evening there will be a union temperance meeting, notice of which will be found elsewhere in this paper. On Monday we shall leave for the centennial at Pittsburg. After the 20th we shall be at our old home at New Castle, Pa. Let every member of the church be present at the morning service Sunday.

Bible school and communion service, together with social meeting, will be held each Lord's day during the minister's absence. The Bible school will be in charge of Miss Phosa Scoville. Communion and social meeting in charge of D. A. Shaw.

The Y. P. S. C. E. are planning for a special service for Sunday evening. Let every member see to it that they are on time prepared to take an active part in the service.

Men of keen intellect have graced this old earth by their presence. They have given innumerable blessings by their painstaking inquiries into the why and wherefore of things. Yet after all when account is taken of the vicissitudes of life what are all these things worth if man is not immortal, if the compass of existence lies between the cradle and the grave?

S. B. BRADEN, Minister.

"I'd Rather Die, Doctor

than have my feet cut off," said M. L. Bingham, of Princeville, Ill., "but you'll die from gangrene (which had eaten away eight toes) if you don't," said all doctors. Instead he used Bucklen's Arnica Salve till wholly cured. Its cures of Eczema, Fever Sores, Boils, Burns and Piles astound the world. 25c at Stone's drug store. 39-1m

A Toledo paper says there are 7,000,000 tramps in this country. If this is true it is only another indication of the widespread prosperity that Americans are enjoying. The back-door handouts are never plentiful in periods of financial depression.

The fact of the matter is, just between ourselves, that the wealthy man, instead of planning how he can muzzle the preacher, often goes home from church wondering why the man in the pulpit talked so feebly and genially of psychology, the "modern spirit," and the beauties of good nature instead of telling him he was lax and cowardly and ease-loving in the field of his higher duties and warning him to quit his meanness and remember that there is a God in Israel.

Cave Mountain, in the Siskiyou National Forest, in Josephine County, Oregon, has lately been set aside as a national monument by President Taft. The mountain contains some extensive caves in the marble and other limestone rocks that compose it. The caves were discovered in 1874 by a bear hunter, and were partly explored three years later. Although they were penetrated to a distance of two miles, it is known that there remain many chambers and passage ways which have not yet been entered. The government has built trails through the forest to facilitate access to the caves.

It is expected that this year's corn crop will be the largest ever grown. The estimate is three billion bushels, worth to the farmers who raise it more than two billion dollars. Corn is indeed the king of all American crops, the greatest material contribution of the country to the wealth and welfare of mankind. Cotton and wheat are often ranked with corn, yet the most valuable cotton crop the country ever raised, that of 1906, was worth only seven hundred and twenty-two million dollars—a little more than one-third of the value of this year's corn crop—and the greatest wheat crop, that of 1908, was smaller still in value, six hundred and seventeen million dollars. The value of this year's corn crop is greater than the nation's entire bonded debt at the close of the civil war. Corn is something distinctively American. The maize of the Indian was the mainstay of the pioneer. It hastened the conquest of the continent and is one of its golden glories. Great is King Corn!

Nearly all European nations have quarantine and inspection laws intended to prevent the importation of injurious insects. The chief of the American Bureau of Entomology, who has recently returned from a tour of inspection of European exporting nurseries, has been setting forth the importance of keeping out all sorts of insect pests liable to destroy trees and growing crops. The same newspaper which contained the entomologist's views announced, in a despatch from the state capital, that the codling-moth and other insects have injured the Pennsylvania apple and peach crop to the extent of a million dollars. The codling-moth is not a native of America, as it came with the apple tree. The San Jose scale is supposed to have entered the country from Japan; the brown-tail moths were brought here on roses from Europe. Now the national government is cooperating with the state government of Massachusetts in an effort to get rid of these rapidly increasing pests.

Statisticians connected with the census bureau give it as their "guess" that the decennial count next year will show a population for the United States of between 90,000,000 and 95,000,000, with a possibility that it will climb to 100,000,000. This last figure is probably pure statistical exuberance. The total is much more likely to be between 90,000,000 and 95,000,000, if one may judge from the leisurely way in which the big cities have grown during the past decade. Taking 95,000,000 as approximately correct, we have the following comparative figures—revised up to this year—of the populations of the great world powers, including their colonies and their dependencies:

Chinese Empire	483,000,000
British Empire	410,000,000
Russian Empire	152,000,000
United States (including Philippine Islands and Porto Rico)	95,000,000
France	90,000,000
German Empire	72,000,000
Japan	49,000,000
Austria-Hungary	45,000,000
Netherlands	43,000,000
Ottoman Empire	35,000,000
Italy	33,000,000

Never since recorded history began has the population of the world increased so rapidly as during the last half of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth. Immigration from western Europe to North America, South America, Australia and South Africa has added much to their populations without decreasing the number in Europe. The United States increased in population during the first half of the nineteenth century 340 per cent, and during the second half 228 per cent. But these figures were small to begin with and the huge percentages mean little. A better notion of our growth may be gained from the statement that the country added 18,000,000 to its population between 1800 and 1850, and between 1850 and 1900—disregarding the accessions of territory—it added 52,000,000. At the present time there is no country in the world except Argentina which is increasing at a higher rate than the United States. It will be interesting to determine from the forthcoming census just what our rate of increase is.

MONKEY AS AUTHOR'S PET.

Simian Tore Up Manuscripts and Concealed Valuable Orders.

A Paris contemporary dealing with the love of great men for animals gives an amusing account of Chateaubriand and his monkey, the London Globe says. When he was engaged in preparing Fontanes' works for the press on returning one day he was met by his monkey.

"Ah, you rogue," said Chateaubriand, "your shamefaced look tells of mischief." The monkey was chained up, but as things did not appear much disturbed Chateaubriand thought no more of the matter until it was time to resume work. Fontanes' manuscripts were not to be found.

At last Chateaubriand looked into the waste paper basket and there were the manuscripts. The monkey had watched his master, and as he had seen him fold a sheet of paper and tear it into four, so he had dealt with Fontanes' writings. With much labor they were pieced together and afterward published.

Chateaubriand thought it advisable to see what else the monkey had done. His orders had disappeared from a drawer which was always kept closed. The servants searched everywhere for them, but they were not to be found. Nearly a week elapsed before they were traced, and then a domestic noticed that the monkey had suspended them to the cornice in a quasi-symmetrical way.

The monkey was given his conge and Chateaubriand replaced him by a cat, which was allowed a place on his master's writing table, and great was the pleasure which he derived in playing with puss.

Judgment Reversed.

An essayist and author of considerable repute, whom a summer vacation has just freed from several neighboring students of lusty vocal powers, tells the following story that will be appreciated in every lodging-house district:

A middle-aged and nervous tenant in an apartment-house had summoned his next-door neighbor, a young woman student at the Conservatory, into court, and charged that the peace and quiet of his lodging had been disturbed by her singing.

The court was inclined to regard the proceedings as unwarranted.

"How much do you sing?" he asked the defendant.

"Only two hours a day," she answered; "an hour in the morning and one at night."

"Two hours!" said the judge. "It appears unreasonable to complain of that."

"But, your honor," interposed the complainant, starting up excitedly, "I trust you will not decide the matter until you have heard the defendant sing."

The defendant was not at all loath to sing. In fact, her personal assurance and professional pride urged her to make the most of this opportunity in the interests of high art.

She began an aria from Wagner, but she had sung but four or five bars when the court interrupted her.

"That will do—that will do," he said. "No further testimony need be taken. The court's judgment is reversed."

What Could She Have Heard?

Professor Robert Herrick possesses a full share of the artist's sensitiveness in regard to the inartistic. Some years ago he had for next-door neighbors a family among whose charms good taste was lacking.

One morning the professor's little daughter made an unexpected call at the house of this family. "Show me the rug in your room," she demanded with childish imperiousness.

The lady of the house suppressed her wonder and took her little visitor upstairs. Inside the door the child stood and stared at the rug for a couple of minutes. "Him!" she said, and sat herself firmly in a chair, her eyes glued to the rug. Finally she confided to her wondering hostess, "Well, it doesn't make me sick!"—Success Magazine.

A WARNING TO WOMEN.

MENTION has been made of the new and fashionable zoophil-psychosis, or exaggerated affection for animals, which nerve specialists now recognize as a distinct type of malady among women. Two types of women are comprised among the victims of the new disorder—those who find it easier to stuff a lapdog with caramels than to exert energy in housekeeping, and those overburdened with nonsensical theories inculcated by scores of so-called new thought expounders. In each type artificial sympathies are carefully cultivated. But in one case the woman is lazy, unintelligent and merely fond of herself, while in the other she believes herself to be a philosopher, gifted with insight, highly mystical and somewhat above the ordinary mortal. Of the latter type must be the gifted American writer of overvivid verse and platitudinous prose who recently unveiled to the trembling public the pitiful throbs of her heart in the throes of a soul-kiss received from a horse.

Imagine a condition of ecstatic self-hypnotism which mysticizes the kindly caress of a lonesome equine. Imagine, if your imagination can stand such a strain, a feminine philosophy which regards as fit subject for dilation to the suffering public the soul-kiss of a horse. Surely this is zoophil-psychosis in its worst form. Such rapturous thrills as this talented lady might experience from the sentimental advances of a melancholy mule should be too sacred to be rudely exposed to the unsentimental world.—Chicago Journal.

OUR LITTLE ARMY.

OFFICERS of the highest rank have been few in the American army. In fact, no officer of the very highest rank—that of field marshal—has ever been commissioned by the United States. Including Washington, there have been but four generals since the establishmant of the government, and only twelve officers have held the rank of lieutenant general. With the retirement of Lieutenant General MacArthur, on account of age, on June 2, the rank was discontinued.

It is on account of the smallness of the army that officers of high rank have seldom been appointed to command it. The European armies, with their field marshals and generals, are large enough to warrant the permanent organization with commanders of all grades. At the time of the Mexican war Major General Scott was the only officer of that rank in the whole American army. It was not till 1855 that he received the brevet rank of lieutenant general. Washington was the only other officer who prior to that time had held the rank.

When Grant was made lieutenant general in 1864 he was really the first officer to hold that rank while in actual command of the armies of the nation in time of war. Grant was promoted to the higher rank of general in 1866. His successors were Sherman and Sheridan. When Sheridan died in 1888, two months after he was made general, the rank of general and lieutenant general ceased, and the lower rank was not revived till twelve years later, when Major General Miles was made lieutenant general. The grade has continued for the past nine years, and six officers who reached it are now on the retired list.

The highest rank in the army is now that of major general, and the senior officer of that grade is Leonard Wood. He is in command of the Department of the East. So long as the army continues small, and so long as there is no occasion for its active service in extended operations, Congress is likely to allow the present situation to remain unchanged.—Youth's Companion.

FLY A PUBLIC ENEMY.

IF it be true—and there is no reason to doubt the oft-repeated dictum of physicians and sanitarians—that the fly is "the barometer of the filth of the community," the first duty is the cultivation of cleanly habits, both in the community at large and in the domestic domain. Experience has shown that an immediate reduction of the number of flies has followed the cleaning up of rubbish heaps, the removal of manure piles and the adoption of sanitary methods in stables and other places where organic filth is liable to accumulate. The protection of the fly from infection in turn requires the screening of sickrooms and scrupulous care in the disposal of wastes of every character. Finally, the protection of man against the fly calls for the same strict screening of houses and the rigid enforcement of precautions against the access of flies to food supplies, whether in the house or in the market.

Some or all of these precautions will be neglected or scouted by the careless and the indifferent, but with the wider spread of accurate knowledge of the part which the fly actually plays in the dissemination of disease the public should be willing to enlist with greater unanimity in the campaign planned by health authorities in this and other cities.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A DEPARTMENT OF HYGIENE.

AN interesting announcement comes from Cambridge. Harvard is to add a new department to its medical curriculum. It will give its attention to the subject of public health and preventive medicine. A professor to have charge of the instruction has been chosen and the new work will begin with the opening of the next university year. The statement is made that the department is established in recognition of the growing importance of the subject to be studied.

In the large cities, particularly, the most casual observer has noted the trend of medical thought. The Health Department has become an educator of the people. Its officials have carried the idea into many a household that a large share of the diseases of humanity may be prevented. The value of fresh air has been emphasized. The importance of cleanliness has been urged again and again. The necessity of careful attention to little details of household administration has been kept constantly in view. Sometimes the cynical laugh. But the officials continue their work. Then they point to the mortality records as evidence of the value of their instruction.—Chicago Tribune.

PET AND PLAYMATE.

"The time will come," said Hobbes, "when man will be humane even to the wolf;" and it may be added, to the smaller creatures, with which he persists in waging war. In this light it is interesting to read a story printed by the New York Times. "Let me tell you something that happened early yesterday morning," the private watchman said to a Times reporter. "It's not news:

"Before midnight I noticed an old woman sitting on the steps of the building of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in 26th street. I thought she'd got tired and had stopped to rest. Passing at 12 o'clock, I saw her still there, sitting up straight, as if waiting for some one. A 1 o'clock she was still there. At 2 I investigated her case—not that it was any of my business.

"'Officer,' said she, 'you'll let me stay here, won't you? I'll tell you why. I'm cook and maid an' bottle-washer an' everything except cap'n on the lumber barge Queenie—been there for twelve years now.

"'In this shawl is Napoleon—my white rat. A scholar I knew gave him that name, because he's so little and fat. He said Napoleon was generally that way.

"'You wouldn't think much of a rat for a pet? Why, me an' Napoleon have had some great times together. On dark winter nights, when the wind an' waves are cutting up outside, me an' Napoleon go through our tricks by lamplight behind solid timbers.

"'He can stand on his hind legs, an' he'll lie down an' turn over when I say the word. Summer days we chase each other 'round over the lumber, an' the old man says we're a pair of fools.

"'Well, sir, the last trip up Napoleon began to ail. I noticed that the minute he stood on his hind feet he fell over. "Napoleon, there's something wrong with you," I said.

"'Well, we got into Harlem early to-night. I started out to look for a doctor. I walked in an' waited for two hours, an' then he said he didn't doctor vermin. What do you think of that, officer? Napoleon a vermin!

"'I kept on walking along looking for doctor signs in the windows. Two more places I went the girl said right out flat, when she saw me at the door, that the doctor wa'n't in an' wa'n't expected.

"'After a while I went into a saloon, and a man there said the society in this building had all kinds of animal doctors, an' would help out any kind of an animal. He told me how to get here.

"'It took me some time, an' when I got here it was shut up. That's what I'm waiting for—for them to open up. I hope they open up early.

"'Officer, I'll give you a peep at Napoleon. I'm 'fraid he'd catch his death if I let you see all of him in this night air, him being so puny already. The old man says he's just nat'ly dying of old age, same as him an' me will soon, he says; but I told him—Mercy me, officer, Napoleon's dead already!'

"I called an ambulance," concluded the private watchman, "because she fainted. But she came round all right, and went back to Harlem. She said she guessed the old man was right about Napoleon—and her, too."

PLUCKY WOMAN TRAVELER.

Globetrotter Has Many Unique Experiences in Foreign Lands.

This much-traveled young woman is Miss Edna Glenn, of Philadelphia, the Toledo News-Bee says.

Her latest foreign trip included the Philippines, Japan and China, and a trip across Siberia, from Vladivostok to Moscow.

This Siberian journey she took by rail, but entirely alone, much to the anxiety of her friends. Miss Glenn declares, however, that she never traveled more luxuriously, the long Russian train being equipped with every comfort and convenience (save, perhaps, that of heat). There was even a tearoom and a library, to which passengers had access.

Although the trip was made as early as September and many wild flowers were still in bloom, it was so cold that passengers had to wrap themselves up in as many coats as they possessed, and the snow fences were already being put up along the railroad.

While passing through Manchuria the train was armed with guards—one at the end of each car—to protect against the Manchurian bandits that infest that country, and who are, for the most part, escaped convicts.

The villages through which the train passed were mere groups of wooden shacks and the people were clothed in rags.

But it was after crossing the Russian border, Miss Glenn says, that she was most forcibly struck with the horrors of the peasants' degraded condition.

It was while in Japan that Miss Glenn took another journey alone, which was of a still more adventurous nature.

Accompanied only by a Japanese maid, this fearless young woman set out on an expedition to Fujiyama, to see the great volcanic mountain mirrored in the lake at its foot.

Miss Glenn soon found, however, that she must be parted even from the company of her maid, it being necessary for the latter to travel in a kago, or small, box-shaped carriage, carried by coolies, while she herself must go on horseback, with a single coolie as her guide and attendant.

Another of her unique experiences was Miss Glenn's seven months' residence on board a United States monitor, in a harbor at the Philippines, considerably removed from civilization. She was there as the guest of the commanding officer and his wife, and did everything but sleep, literally "under water." It being too warm for comfort in the submerged portion of the monitor beds were made up on the quarter deck.

Miss Glenn is an artist as well as traveler, and expects to return, before long, to Japan to paint its picturesque scenery and to study more intimately the life of its people, away from the beaten track of the tourists. For she acknowledges herself to be "in love with Japan," above all other countries she has visited.

A TALE THAT IS TOLD.

Civilization of Red Man Completed with Recent Land Openings.

The opening of three Indian reservations in the West and the parceling of their share of the public lands to the Indians marks almost the last milestone in the conquest of the savages, Collier's says. The Indian becomes a homesteader. He takes his place side by side with the white farmer and rancher. He has long since ceased to roam in the old nomadic way. He confines himself to periodical visits to the towns and cities of the whites, where he looks with curious eyes upon the puzzling novelties of civilization. He discards the blanket for trousers and galluses. His daughter, gowned in innocent white, marches under evening shadows, to the far-echoing toll of the vesper bell, a mingling figure in the silent vesper processional. His son is a cornetist in the reservation brass band. Thus the former warrior lives and dies, the last vestige of a dissolving race. Here and there throughout the West still remain remnants of tribal life, pitiful figures that lag superfluous upon a stage once swelling with the pomp and paint of feathers and nightmared with the holocaust of blood. It is not a far call from Fenimore Cooper's Chingachgook to Charlot, the chief of the Flatheads. One was the warrior of a dying race on Atlantic shores, the other is the aged patriarch of the last of the red men's power on the Pacific. Charlot has all the savage romanticism with which Cooper's pen endowed the character of his hero. He has always insisted that his name was forged to the treaty negotiated by James A. Garfield, then chairman of an Indian commission, whereby the Flatheads were dispossessed of their camping grounds in the Bitter Root valley. Political injustice it was that fomented the war, culminating in the battle of the Big Hole, historically known as the march of Chief Joseph. The policy of the government which turned these wards over to the care of political carpet-baggers reacted upon innocent heads and left a ghastly trail.

The Mathematical Problem.

Little Marion was busy at her "home work." After a great many perplexed frowns and much nibbling at her pencil she looked up and said:

"The only answer I can get to this example is 'five and three-fourths horses.' Do you s'pose that is right, mamma?"

"Well, I don't know," answered her mother, cautiously. "It sounds rather queer."

A long pause; then the small arithmetician's face lit up with a smile.

"Oh, I know!" she cried; "I'll reduce the three-fourths horses to colts!"—Woman's Home Companion.

Small talk is responsible for the use of many big words.

The sacrifice you are glad to make is seldom a sacrifice.

THE OLDEST LOVE LETTER.

Written in Clay Four Thousand Years Ago—Women's Rights.

A love letter four thousand years old has lately been discovered in Chaldea. The lady to whom it was addressed lived in Sippara, the Biblical Sepharvani. Her beloved was a resident of Babylon.

In contrast to the position which women hold at the present day in the orient they possessed in antiquity a great degree of freedom. In many respects the oriental woman of antiquity was graced with as much privilege as is the modern European woman. Particularly in Chaldea she could participate in trade, manipulate her own property, by a witness before court, and be the guardian of her own children. Of the position of women in Egypt we know less, but doubtless it was much higher than that of the present Mohammedan women. In one respect, however, it seems that custom has been changed very slightly, for marriage was essentially an affair of trade between the parents of the bridegroom and those of the bride. This is ascertained from the legal code of Hammurabi, king of Babylon, B. C. 2200. The future husband paid the price of the bride and her father provided her dower and trousseau. Under these circumstances there was no such thing as courship as precedes marriage in accordance with occidental ideas. Still one may believe that many a love letter on papyrus or clay passed secretly between the hands of the bridal pair during the interval of their engagement.

The newly discovered letter is written in clay and probably dates from 2200 B. C. Though somewhat formal, the reader can feel the tenderness that lies hidden between its lines. It reads:

"To the lady, Kasbuya (little ewe) says Gimil Marduk (the favorite of Morodach) this: May the Sun God of Marduk afford you eternal life. I write wishing that I may know how your health is. Oh, send me a message about it. I live in Babylon and have not seen you, and for this reason I am very anxious. Send me a message that will tell me when you will come to me, so that I may be happy. Come in Marchesvan. May you live long for my sake."—Current Literature.

FAMOUS, AFTER ALL.

One of the interesting things about foreign travel is the abundance of historic or literary association. Every village, almost, has its great event in the past to be proud of. And so, says a writer in the Chicago Ledger, the American who found himself in an obscure English village, his guide book left behind, felt very confident that there must me something for which it was renowned.

About the first person he met when he fared forth was a seedy native, who looked promising as a source of information.

"What are the points of interest about this village?" he asked.

"I be n't aware of any, zur," the old man replied.

"Surely this must be one of the places where Julius Cæsar hid some relics."

"I ain't heared on it, zur."

"Isn't this the storied spit where King Arthur demanded maple syrup on his waffles?"

"It mout 'a' been before my time, zur."

"At least, here's where William the Conqueror stopped to have his pants pressed before the battle of Hastings?"

"No, zur."

"Funny locality this, for England! Are you certain this isn't the precinct the Plantagenets carried by seventeen majority in the election of 1154, when there weren't but three registered votes?"

"I don't remember of it, zur."

"Perhaps this is the historic ground where King John subscribed to a new platform and tried to straddle the election-of-senators-by-popular-vote plank?"

"No, zur, I think not."

"Not even the scene of a floral battle during the War of the Roses?"

"No, zur."

"And didn't Henry the Eighth ever find one of his wives here?"

"He didn't as I know on, zur."

"Well, I bet this is where Queen Elizabeth used to come to take her milk baths. You have milk here, haven't you?"

"I dunno as she ever took baths zur."

"Aren't there any ruins of battlegrounds of ghosts or legends or quaint customs or souvenir post cards, or anything??"

"Never a one, zur."

"What kind of a place is this, anyway?"

"I believe, zur, it do be where some 'un wrote a elegy on the country churchyard, zur."

Popular Song.

Billy Maloney loved Maggie Maloney,
A squeezable, pleasable pearl;
Maggie was sighable, quite glorifiable,
And a most eyable girl.
Nightly she'd meet him, and brightly she'd greet him,
And smile in her cute little way.
He'd say: "Shall we go, dear, and take in the show, dear?"
And she'd answer: "No, dear," and say:

Chorus—

"Give me a spin in your motor, Bill!
My goodness gracious, I can't keep still!
Buss me along on the boulevard!
Let 'er go, Willie boy, good and hard!
Throw it wide open—I'll hold on tight—
I don't care a fudge if my hair's a fright!
There's nothing that gives me such keen delight
As a spin in your motor, Bill!"

NEWS OF RECENT BOOKS

A memoir of special interest is soon to appear. This will be "The Life and Letters of Mrs. Craigie ("John Oliver Hobbes"). It is edited by the dean of Manchester.

Professor Lombroso, in his seventy-third year, has attacked a new subject and his book about it is in press. This is entitled "Spiritist Phenomena and Their Interpretation." In it he expresses himself as fairly satisfied of the ability of the dead to communicate with the living.

A significant letter on recent French changes in literary fashion has been written by M. Paul Bourget. "At the time when I was entering upon a literary life," he says, "we all adopted a regular cult for the art of the novel, which was only equaled by our disdain for the art of the theater; and we had no difficulty in showing what differences there were between the painting of a Balzac, a Flaubert, a Goncourt and those of their dramatic rivals. Our immediate predecessors, Zola, Daudet and Ferdinand Fabre, thought as we did, and about 1880 all the youthful French exponents of literature seemed to be novelists exclusively. The wind has turned since then and there has been an extraordinary growth of dramatic works, which shows how foolish was our former disdain of the dialogue form. And, judging from signs, it seems to be the other form—the narrative—against which the injustice of the newcomers is now leveled."

In considering the Tennyson centenary the London Times discusses the extent to which Tennyson has declined in critical esteem, and the reasons for it. Tennyson, it observes, is not the only sufferer. "There has been a reaction against all the great Victorian writers, against Carlyle and Ruskin, against Dickens and Thackeray, even against Browning, who was the idol of the first reactionaries against Tennyson. No doubt this reaction has seemed to the earlier admirers of these great men to be mere folly of a perverse generation. But they may console themselves with the certainty that there is already in the minds of a generation not yet articulate a reaction against Swinburne and Meredith which will produce the same anger and dismay in their first eager admirers. Youth always it, and always has been, cruel to the idols of middle age, and middle age always retaliates by scoffing at the idols of youth, as Aristophanes scoffed at Euripides. Every new generation quarrels with the last; and, however great a man may be, there is always something a little dowdy about him, like the fashions of last year, to those whose youth has been spent in the shadow of his greatness."

EXPENSIVE SMOKE CLOUD.

Immense Loss to the Country by the Improvident Use of Coal.

"The damage which smoke inflicts every year in the United States amounts to more than $600,000,000 in the destruction of merchandise, the defacing of buildings, the tarnishing of metals, the injury to plant life and the greatly increased labor and cost of housekeeping," says H. M. Wilson, chief engineer of the technologic branch of the United States Geological Survey.

And all of it is useless, the San Antonio Light asserts. All of it is waste. All the carbon which floats away like black snow to defile homes and ruin property from that black-plumed smokestack which beclouds the air is coal. It costs money. It should be burned up and not thrown up into the air.

When soft coal is burning perfectly it sends off no more smoke than does anthracite. It it imperfect combustion that makes smoke. And of course imperfect combustion is a waste to the man who burns the coal, as well as to the community which it defiles.

Once some visitors at a factory saw that no smoke was to be seen leaving the stacks.

"What sort of smoke-preventing device have you?" asked one.

"A fireman named Pat Gilligan," was the reply. "As long as we can keep Pat we won't have much smoke."

Pat was a good fireman, that is all. Good stoking will stop a large part of the smoke from all furnaces which have fireboxes large enough so that steam can be kept up without crowding the fires. When the fires are crowded nothing can prevent smoke.

The mayor of a middle western city a few years ago started to get an ordinance enacted to prevent smoke. He knew that there were devices for stoking fire which will almost entirely stop the nuisance and he felt that it was rather disgraceful for any community to stay dirty when it might be clean.

There were some packing houses in that town, and they silently pulled wires to kill the ordinance. The mayor was a good politician, and knew that he had run against a snag. He went to the manager of the packing house which he identified with most of the adverse pull and asked him what the mater was.

"I can't get an appropriation for the rebuilding of the furnaces," said the manager. "I know that it would be money in our pockets to burn up this coal rather than waste it in smoke. But you have to have firebox room for smokeless firing. Sometimes we'll get around to it. Until we can we'll have to fight you, Mr. Mayor, and I believe we can stop you with this council."

The mayor was beaten and retired from the field gracefully.

The packing house went on poisoning the community for ten years longer. Then it rebuilt its furnaces, put in mechanical stokers and now those same stacks send out only a faint blur of white smoke. They could all accomplish the same reform, and would do so if the communities in which they live and the owners of the plants were only half awake to the plainest considerations of economy and personal cleanliness and health.

LEMONS ON BRYAN'S FARM.

What Noted Orator Hopes to Have Down on the Rio Grande.

The 160 acres of Rio Grande valley land which William J. Bryan, the Democratic leader, purchased near Mission nearly one year ago is being rapidly converted into a veritable tropical garden. When here on his last visit Bryan said that he intends to make this tract of land the finest country home in the United States, a Mission (Texas) dispatch says. He has selected the site for his winter residence upon the land and its construction will be started soon.

Bryan went on to explain his statement by saying that while his residence will not be as expensive as some other country homes it will be surrounded by orchards of citrus and other fruits and the whole estate will be brought up to the highest possible standard of beauty and productiveness.

All of Bryan's land here is already under ditch and that part which is now planted and in cultivation is irrigated at regular intervals from the canal system which runs through the property. The preliminary work of beautification has already received a good start. A broad, curved driveway, leading from the main road to the site of the proposed residence has been laid out and upon each side of it has been planted rows of date palm trees. These trees are doing well and have made a good growth during the summer. To the left of the driveway is an orchard of several acres of young English walnut and pecan trees, while bordering the driveway on the right is a large orchard of orange trees.

In addition to these trees Bryan has had many acres planted in fig trees, lemon trees and many other varieties of tropical and semi-tropical fruit and nut-bearing trees. He sent to remote parts of the world for strange varieties of trees and plants which he has had set out upon this farm.

One of the attractive features of Bryan's farm is a large vineyard, which will soon be a producer of marketable fruit.

QUEER STORIES

The King James Bible contains sixty-six books.

Fourteen apocryphal books of the Bible are recorded.

Of the 825 gondolas in Venice, 250 belong to private parties.

In the list of imports of this country bananas stand twenty-fourth in point of value.

The Swedish government is seriously considering the establishment of a tobacco monopoly.

Trees bearing sour oranges have grown wild along Florida swamps for hundreds of years.

In the State of Washington 27 per cent of the area is still in reservations, the greater extent being of forestry reserves.

The South, with 27 per cent of the total area of the United States, contains about 42 per cent of the total forest area of the country.

One of the exhibits at Seattle is a model of a house and stable, showing how rats, the carriers of bubonic plague, can be kept at a respectful distance.

Dr. Chamberlain, U. S. A., says that 60 per cent of Southern-bred soldiers have hook worm disease, and of many new recruits the percentage is at times as high as 85. Southern recruits are less well developed physically than Northern ones.

Miss N. Edwars, of Coaley, Gloucestershire, is said to be the highest authority in England on poultry. She has won over one thousand prizes and exported poultry into every country. Beginning in a small way with only twenty fowls, her poultry farm is now one of the largest in England. She not only raises chickens for the general market, but sells eggs and stock birds.

Nuremberg is the center of the toy trade of the world. More than half the employes in the toy factories are women and girls. The wages of the female toymakers are about 5 cents an hour. Of the estimated German toy output of $25,000,000 a year, about $19,000,000 is exported, more than half going to Great Britain and the United States.

VARIETIES OF CORN FLOWER.

Three Hundred and Fifty Different Specimens in Existence.

Germany adopted the corn flower as a national institution many years ago, the adaption coming about merely by way of a popular choice. It is a common flower all over Europe, but rather more prolific in Germany than in any other of the countries graced by it.

Botanists tell us that there are no less than 350 varieties of the corn flower to be found, but the plant that is found in profusion in the realms of the kaiser is said to be the most beautiful of all. The Germans admire it for the richness of its wreath-like circle of outer florets and the splendors of its deep azure tints as it opens to the sun.

At one time German scientists attributed certain medicinal properties to the corn flower, and its blue blossoms were used also to some extent in domestic dyeing, but latterly these properties are not so much credited to it.

Although Germany lays claim to the finest of the species, America may boast also of some beautiful specimens of the corn flower. It is said to have been brought to this country first in the ballast of ships in the days antedating the modern ocean flyer, which carries only water ballast. In this country it is variously known as the Bachelor's Button, Corn Bottle, Witches' Bells or Thimbles, Blue Bonnet and Blue Poppy.

CHAPTER III.

True to his determination, the doctor devoted the night following his advent into the little frontier village to the investigation of the Quaker preacher's fitness for his use. He took Pepeeta with him, the older habitues of the tavern standing on the porch and smiling ironically as they started. The meeting house was one of those conventional weather-boarded buildings with which all travelers in the Western States are familiar. The rays of the tallow candles by which it was lighted were streaming feebly out into the night. The doors were open, and through them were passing meek-faced, soft-voiced and plain-robed worshipers.

Keeping close together, Pepeeta light and graceful, the doctor heavy and awkward, both of them thoroughly embarrassed, they ascended the steps as a bear and gazelle might have walked the gang-plank into the ark. They entered unobserved save by a few of the younger people who were staring vacantly about the room, and took their seats on the last bench. The Quaker maidens who caught sight of Pepeeta were visibly excited and began to preen themselves as turtle doves might have done if a bird of paradise had suddenly flashed among them. One of them happened to be seated next her. She was dressed in quiet drabs and grays. Her face and person were pervaded and adorned by simplicity, meekness, devotion; and the contrast between the two was so striking as to render them both self-conscious and uneasy in each other's presence.

The visitors did not know at all what to expect in this unfamiliar place, but could not have been astonished or awed by anything else half so much as by the inexplicable silence which prevailed. If the whole assemblage had been dancing or turning somersaults, they would not have been surprised, but the few moments in which they thus sat looking stupidly at the people and then at each other seemed to them like a small eternity. Pepeeta's sensitive nature could ill endure such a strain, and she became nervous.

"Take me away," she imploringly whispered to the doctor, who sat by her side, ignorant of the custom which separated the sexes.

He tried to encourage her in a few half-suppressed words, took her trembling hand in his great paw, pressed it reassuringly, winked humorously, and then looked about him with a sardonic grin.

To Pepeeta's relief, the silence was at last broken by an old man who rose from his seat, reverently folded his hands, lifted his face to heaven, closed his eyes and began to speak. She had never until this moment listened to a prayer, and this address to an invisible Being wrought in her already agitated mind a confused and exciting effect; but the prayer was long, and gave her time to recover her self-control. The silence which followed its close was less painful because less strange than the other, and she permitted herself to glance about the room and to wonder what would happen next. Her curiosity was soon satisfied. David Corson, the young mystic, rose to his feet. He was dressed with exquisite neatness in that simple garb which lends to a noble person a peculiar and serious dignity. Standing for a moment before he began his address, he looked over the audience with the self-possession of an accomplished orator. The attention of every person in the room was at once arrested. They all recalled their wandering or preoccupied thoughts, lifted their bowed heads and fixed their eyes upon the commanding figure before them.

This general movement caused Pepeeta to turn, and she observed a sudden transformation on the countenance of the dove-like Quaker maiden. A flush mantled her pale cheek and a radiance beamed in her mild blue eyes. It was a tell-tale look, and Pepeeta, who divined its meaning, sulled sympathetically.

But the first word which fell from the lips of the speaker withdrew her attention from every other object, for his voice possessed a quality with which she was entirely unfamiliar. It would have charmed and fascinated the hearer, even if it had uttered incoherent words. For Pepeeta, it had another and a more mysterious value. It was the voice of her destiny, and rang in her soul like a bell. The speech of the young Quaker was a simple and unadorned message of the love of God to men, and of their power to respond to the Divine call.

Each sentence had fallen into the sensitive soul of the fortune teller like a pebble into a deep well. She was gazing at him in astonishment. Her lips were parted, her eyes were suffused and she was leaning forward breathlessly.

When at length David stopped speaking, it seemed to Pepeeta as if a sudden end had come to everything; as if rivers had ceased to run and stars to rise and set. She drew a long, deep breath, sighed and sank back in her seat, exhausted by the nervous tension to which she had been subjected.

The effect upon the quack was hardly less remarkable. He, too, had listened with breathless attention. He tried to analyze and then to resist this mesmeric power, but gradually succumbed. He felt as if chained to his seat, and it was only by a great effort that he pulled himself together, took Pepeeta by the arm and drew her out into the open air.

For a few moments they walked in silence, and then the doctor exclaimed: "P-p-peeta, I have found him at last!"

"Found whom?" she asked sharply, irritated by the voice which offered such a rasping contrast to the one still echoing in her ears.

"Found whom? As if you didn't know! I mean the man of d-d-destiny! He is a snake charmer, Pepeeta! He just fairly b-b-bamboozled you! I was laughing in my sleeve and saying to myself, 'He's bamboozled Pepeeta; but he can't b-b-bamboozle me!' When he up and did it! Tee-totally did it! And if he can bamboozle me, he can bamboozle anybody."

"Did you understand what he said?" Pepeeta asked.

"Understand? Well, I should say not! But between you and me and the town p-p-pump it's all t'is better, for if he can fool the people with that kind of g-g-gibberish, he can certainly f-f-fool them with the Balm of the B-B-Blessed Islands! First time I was ever b-b-bamboozled in my life. Feels queer. Our fortune's made, P-p-pepeeta!"

His triumph and excitement were so great that he did not notice the silence and abstraction of his wife. His ardent mind invariably excavated a channel into which it poured its thoughts, digging its bed so deep as to flow on unconscious of everything else. Exulting in the prospect of attaching to himself a companion so gifted, never doubting for a moment that he could do so, reveling in the dreams of wealth to be gathered from the increased sales of his patent medicine, he entered the hotel and made straight for the barroom, where he told his story with the most unbounded delight.

Pepeeta retired at once to her room, but her mind was too much excited and her heart too much agitated for slumber. She moved restlessly about for a long time and then sat down at the open window and looked into the night. For the first time in her life, the mystery of existence really dawned upon her. She gazed with a new awe at the starry sky. She thought of that Being of whom David had spoken. Questions which had never before occurred to her knocked at the door of her mind and imperatively demanded an answer. "Who am I? Whence did I come? For what was I created? Whither did I come? For what was I created? Whither am I going?" she asked herself again and again with profound astonishment at the newness of these questions and her inability to answer them.

For a long time she sat in the light of the moon, and reflected on these mysteries with all the power of her untutored mind. But that power was soon exhausted, and vague, chaotic, abstract conceptions gave place to a definite image which had been eternally impressed upon her inward eyes. It was the figure of the young Quaker, idealized by the imagination of an ardent and emotional woman whose heart had been thrilled for the first time.

She began timidly to ask herself what was the meaning of those feelings which this stranger had awakened in her bosom. She knew that they were different from those which her husband inspired; but how different, she did not know. They filled her with a sort of ecstasy, and she gave herself up to them. Exhausted at last by these vivid thoughts and emotions, she rested her head upon her arms across the window sill and fell asleep. It must have been that the young Quaker followed her into the land of dreams, for when her husband aroused her at midnight a faint flush could be seen by the light of the moon on those rounded cheeks.

CHAPTER IV.

On the following morning the preacher-plowman was afield at break of day. The horses, refreshed and rested by food and sleep, dragged the gleaming plowshare through the heavy sod as if it were light snow, and the farmer exulted behind them.

David tied the reins to the plow handles and strode across the fresh furrows. Vaulting the fence and leaping the brook which formed the boundary line of the farm, he ascended the bank and approached a carriage from which a man had hailed him. As he did so the occupants got out and came to meet him. To his astonishment he saw the strangers whom he had noticed the night before. The man advanced with a bold, free demeanor, the woman timidly and with downcast eyes.

"Good morning," said the doctor.

David returned his greeting with the customary dignity of the Quakers.

"My name is Dr. Aesculapius."

"Thee is welcome."

"I was over to the m-m-meeting house last night, and heard your s-speech. Didn't understand a w-word, but saw that you c-c-can talk like a United States Senator."

David bowed and blushed.

"I came over to make you a proposition. Want you to yoke up with me, and help me sell the 'B-B-Balm of the Blessed Islands.' You can do the t-t-talking and I'll run the b-b-business; see? What do you s-s-say?"

Gravely, placidly, the young Quaker answered: "I thank thee, friend, for what thee evidently means as a kindness, but I must decline thy offer."

"Decline my offer? Are you c-c-crazy? Why do you d-d-decline my offer?"

"Because I have no wish to leave my home and work."

Although his answer was addressed to the man, his eyes were directed to the woman. His reply, simple and natural enough, astounded the quack.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Do you mean that you p-p-prefer to stay in this p-p-pigstye of a town to becoming a citizen of the g-g-great world?"

"I do."

"But listen; I will pay you more money in a single month than you can earn by d-d-driving your plow through that b-b-black mud for a whole year."

"I have no need and no desire for more money than I can earn by daily toil."

"No need and no desire for money! B-b-bah! You are not talking to snivveling old women and crack-b-b-brained old men; but to a f-f-feller who can see through a two-inch plank, and you can't p-p-pass off any of your religious d-d-drivel on him, either."

This coarse insult went straight to the soul of the youth. Tis blood tingled in his veins. There was a tightening around his heart of something which was out of place in the bosom of a Quaker. A hot reply sprang to his lips, but died away as he glanced at the woman, and saw her face mantled with an angry flush.

Calmed by her silent sympathy, he quietly replied: "Friend, I have no desire to annoy thee, but I have been taught that 'the love of money is the root of all evil,' and believing as I do I could not answer thee otherwise than I did."

"Well, well, reckon you are more to pitied than b-b-blamed. Fault of early education! Talk like a p-p-parrot! What can a young fellow like you know about life, shut up here in this seven-by-nine valley, like a man in a b-b-barrel looking out of the b-b-bung-hole?"

Offended and disgusted, the Quaker was about to turn upon his heel; but he saw in the face of the man's beautiful companion a look which said plainly as spoken words, "I, too, desire that you should go with us."

This look changed his purpose, and he paused.

"Listen to me now," continued the doctor, observing his irresolution. "You think you know what life is; but you d-d-don't! Do you know what g-g-great cities are? Do you know what it is to p-p-possess and to spend the money which you d-d-despise? Do you know what it is to wear fine clothes, to see great sights, to go where you want to and to do what you p-p-please?"

"I do not, nor do I wish to. And thee must abandon these follies and sins, if thee would enter the Kingdom of God," David replied, fixing his eyes sternly upon the face of the blasphemer.

"Good-bye, d-d-dead man! I have always hated c-c-corpses! I am going where men have red b-b-blood in their veins."

With these words he turned on his heel and started toward the carriage, leaving David and Pepeeta alone. Neither of them moved. The gypsy nervously plucked the petals from a daisy and the Quaker gazed at her face. During these few moments nature had not been idle. In air and earth and tree top, following blind instincts, her myriad children were seeking their mates. And here, in the odorous sunshine of the May morning, these two young, impressionable and ardent beings, yielding themselves unconsciously to the same mysterious attraction which was uniting other happy couples, were drawn together in a union which time could not dissolve and eternity, perhaps, cannot annul.

DOGS AS PASSENGERS.

Hard Problem Considered by Inter-State-Commerce Commission.

Tribulations are besetting the dog. As a traveler, while he is not an outcast, he and his owner are subject, on many steam and electric railways, to regulations that amount to cruelties, a Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Telegram says.

It is not unlikely that the interstate commerce commission in the near future may be called upon to provide uniform regulations for the carrying of dogs on interstate trains. The rules governing the transportation of dogs are merely what each individual line proposes to make them and a movement has been begun to bring about reform regulations that will be fair to passengers and just to the dogs.

Some railroads charge a specified fare for a dog; others transport the dog as baggage, and yet others make no charge, although they differentiate between little dogs and big ones. A few lines permit the owners of "small dogs" to take them into the passenger cars with them; other lines relegate all dogs to the baggage cars, where they are in danger of being crushed by falling trunks; and in some instances the roads require that a dog shall be crated, whether placed in the baggage car or carried by the owner. In practically every case a permit must be obtained.

Commissioner Prouty of the interstate commerce commission, in a letter replying to a recent inquiry as to whether the regulation of the Pullman company that dogs shall not occupy the car is a just and reasonable one, said:

"I am inclined to think it is and that the company is not obliged to distinguish between a small dog and a large one, for the reason that it would be impossible to draw the line if any dogs were permitted in the car.

"The writer has a dog of his own, which is small and inoffensive and which he transports every year from Washington to Newport, Vt. While I am certain this little dog would inconvenience nobody, I have always thought best to submit to the regulation of which you complain."

Poor Mother Eve.

"Dr. Emil Reich is now saying that the American woman can't understand genius. That doesn't preclude her from understanding him."

The speaker, a Colonial Club woman, frowned.

"Dr. Reich," she said, "is anything but a genius, though abroad the women do fawn on him. Here we treated him as a light-weight with a slight gift of humor. He didn't like it. Hence his strictures on us. I admit that Dr. Reich is now and then rather funny. Once, for example, I heard him say at a dinner, apropos of woman's vanity:

"'Mother Eve must have been terribly put out not to be able to hold a small pail of water in front of her when she stood with her back to a pool and tried to see if her hair was properly done up behind.'"

Making the Best of It.

When the young husband reached home from the office he found his wife in tears.

"Oh, John!" she sobbed on his shoulder. "I had baked a lovely cake and I put it out on the back porch for the frosting to dry and the dog ate it!"

"Well, don't cry about it, sweetheart," he consoled, patting the pretty, flushed cheek. "I know a man who will give us another dog!"—Brooklyn Life.

A Worthy Grouch.

"To be in the swim, I paid $4 admission to hear that new pianist last night."

"Well, do you begrudge it?"

"Yes, I do. He turned out to be the fellow I complained to the police about thumping the piano all day and all night in the next flat."—Judge.

PRESIDENT ELIOT ADVOCATES PUBLICITY BEFORE STRIKES

PRESIDENT ELIOT.

The Canadian government, by legislation, has obviated to a great extent strikes that would interfere with public utilities, including mines, is described in McClure's Magazine by Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University. The act for the maintenance of industrial peace in Canada went into effect March 22, 1907. By the operation of the act 96 per cent of strikes were avoided or ended. These pertained to disputes concerning mines, railroads, street railways, longshoremen, teamsters and sailors.

Fifty-five applications have arisen under the act and have resulted in the creation of forty-nine boards. Dr. Eliot shows that, on the fifty-five applications, strikes were avoided or ended in twenty-five coal mines, four metalliferous mines, fifteen railroads, three street railways, two bodies of longshoremen, one body of teamsters, one body of sailors and in two industries that were not public utilities. In only two cases were strikes not averted or ended. The six cases in which boards were not created were settled promptly through the influence of the act.

Some of these disputes involved large numbers of workmen, notably two cases of the Dominion Coal Company, with 3,000 men affected in one case and 7,000 men in another; and several railroad cases in some of which 7,000 to 8,000 men were directly affected. That Canadian workingmen have acquired confidence in the operation of the act Dr. Eliot concludes from the fact that they have been the applicants for the creation of boards in forty-six cases.

Not the least beneficial result of the act, Dr. Eliot considers, is that "although perfect liberty to strike or lock out ultimately is reserved under the Canadian act, several weeks must elapse from the time the dispute began before work can be stopped." Thus, "there is time for passion to cool, and for the costs of war to be counted by both parties. The interests of the public may also get some sort of effective expression during this interval; and when the report of the board is thoroughly published, in accordance with the provisions of the act, public opinion, being well informed, usually expresses itself with clearness and force."

BARON MAKING HIS WAY AROUND WORLD TO TEST HEARTS OF MEN.

On a journey by which he aims to show that civilization has not made mankind heartless, Baron Fon Der Osten-Saken, St. Petersburg, Russia, who says he is a nephew of the Russian minister of war, is making his way around the world. He started penniless. Sitting in a cafe in St. Petersburg he argued with another Russian named Poltovsef, a merchant, regarding the effects of civilization on hospitable instincts. The result of the debate was that the baron started from St. Petersburg without a cent to make his way around the world, testing the kindness of persons he met by applying for employment. The time limit given him is seven years. He is to travel by any means available, but is not to receive alms. He must perform some service for everything he receives.

Since starting he has been through Russia, Siberia, Japan, and China. After crossing the United States and reaching New York he will continue to Mexico, Panama, Central America, South America and Australia. The baron has met many of the titled persons of Japan and China. He was arrested ten times as an impostor while traveling through Russia, but proof that his credentials are genuine brought his release. He was also arrested in Forsythe, Mont., as a tramp.

The traveler is 23 years old. He can speak seven languages. He was a soldier under Micheneff during the Japanese-Russian war. He is a graduate of a military school at St. Petersburg. It is his intention to write a book of travel after he has completed his trip. A prize of $25,000, which he says he will give to charity, is to be awarded him if he ends his journey in the allotted time.

English as She Is Spoke.

The teacher of "conversational French" in a certain Eastern college was a lively mademoiselle "just over."

One bright afternoon she stopped two girls very excitedly. She wanted to buy an "eponge pour la bain," but did not know what to ask for.

"Bath sponge. Tell the salesman you want a big bath sponge to take home with you," said the girls in chorus, and they accompanied her to the village drug store.

A young clerk stepped forward. Mademoiselle advanced bravely.

"Please," she said, smilingly, "will you kindly take me home and give me a big sponge bath?"—Success Magazine.

Eye Salve—A very good salve for granulated eyelids is made as follows: Yellow oxide of mercury, one grain; rose salve or unsalted butter, one-half ounce. Apply to the eyelids night and morning.

Insomnia.—If a person cannot fall asleep, try a sponge bath made thus: Into eight ounces of alcohol put two of ammonia and two of camphor. Shake thoroughly, and when well mixed add four ounces of sea salt and enough hot water to fill a quart bottle. To apply it pour a little of the liquid in a shallow dish and moisten the whole body a little at a time by dipping a small sponge in it. Rub it only a very little, then finish with a vigorous rubbing with a coarse crash towel.

Pellagra.—This new disease promises more surprises in the medical world and more reasons for investigation than anything that has broken loose in a half century. The asylums have long been filled with patients suffering from this disease and supposedly insane. In some cases the disease has been caused by cheap food. Pellagra has probably existed in the United States for many years, although the fact has not been definitely established. Our physicians as yet know little of it, but they are finding it in plenty in many of the states. It is supposed to arise from eating moldy corn, which affects the brain.

USEFUL TREES OF FLORIDA.

Great Variety Growing in the State—Durable Woods.

Florida has perhaps more useful trees growing within her borders than any other State in the Union—a greater variety. But there is a general desire to introduce more, as the soap berry, the tallow tree and the eucalyptus.

An addition to the discussion of the latter, a tree which is very valuable because it has the unusual quality of growing with great rapidity, yet furnishing a hard and durable wood, is furnished by a letter to the editor of the Florida Fruit and Produce News by E. E. Thompson of Avon Park. Mr. Thompson says in part: "Eucalyptus trees were first planted here about 1894, and were injured by the great freeze, but sprouted and grew like orange trees. A few eucalyptus trees planted later have made such wonderful growth as to cause people to look up, take notice and rubberneck to see the lofty tops. The growth in ten years is six feet around the body.

"The seasoned wood is hard as hickory and posts show no decay in the ground. The limbs, twigs, leaves and seed cases make the very best fuel. Our people are convinced of the great value of eucalyptus and are planting them up and down the avenues and in the cemetery and will soon plant them in forest form."

In California some species of eucalyptus show greatest development in low places where rain water stands and in swamps, river bottoms, etc., though they will endure drought, according to a bulletin of the University of California. The durability of the wood, according to other authorities, is due to an oil with which it is impregnated and which is extracted for commercial purposes.—Florida Times-Union.

"I call him Corporation," answered the old colored man.

"How did you come to give him such a name?"

LAW SCHOOL BARS WOMEN.

Memphis Institution Refuses Admission to a Possible Portia.

Following the announcement in Friday afternoon's News-Scimitar that Mrs. Martha Conser has the honor of being the first one to matriculate in the law department of the University of Memphis, it develops that Mrs. Conser must surrender this honor on account of the horrid old rules of the institution, which provide that no women shall be permitted to enroll in this department, say university officials, according to the Memphis News-Scimitar.

Through a misunderstanding, caused by the fact that there are a number of departments in the university open to both sexes, Mrs. Conser was permitted to enroll and her matriculation fee was collected. Now all this must be undone and the amount paid is to be returned to the applicant, the officials say.

"It is not the policy of the university to encourage the study or practice of law by women," said an official of the institution to the News-Scimitar. "What chance would mere men have with a pretty woman making an argument to a susceptible jury? Why, there is not one man in ten who would have the nerve to decide a case against her."

John D. Martin, dean of the law department, said: "The presence of a woman in a law class, in my opinion, necessarily restricts the progress of the work. For instance, there are many times when some of the points of jurisprudence must be illustrated by a story and with the fair sex present extreme care would have to be exercised in selecting the story. I recall an instance when the professor of a law class was getting along fine until a pretty girl student looked up and smiled at him, and then the bump was all off."

SHORT METER SERMONS.

The Good Seed.

The good seed serves the physical stamina, develops the mental power, quickens the conscience and awakens and feeds the sense of spiritual things in men.—Rev. Albert E. Legg, Episcopalian, Providence.

Home and Family.

A baby carriage is more honorable at the door than an automobile. Life means more to the young man who has a home and a family to work for and to live for.—Rev. T. J. McDonald, Roman Catholic, Utica, N. Y.

Stumbling Into Heaven.

Some people stumble and fall and get up again and stumble and fall and get up again. It is better for them to keep stumbling on and finally stumble into heaven than not to get there at all.—Rev. E. Vaughan, Methodist, Santa Monica, Cal.

Beasthood.

Without presenting an ascetic ideal, it is true that a life which finds no more than that which appeals to the creature element in all the range from lust to ambition, is not more than beasthood.—Rev. P. A. Simpkin, Congregationalist, Salt Lake City.

Fashion.

To-day fashion reigns and in her train she drags a motley crowd. Fashion is no mere empty name. It is a living force, far-reaching in its consequences, spreading from the highest to the lowest in the social scale.—Rev. John Deans, Congregationalist, Providence.

Right Living.

Merely living is not the aim of human life, but living so as to contribute to the highest well being of humanity. We are not brought into this world to exhaust our energies on getting enough to eat, but for a higher and nobler end.—Rev. J. H. Mallows, Congregationalist, Los Angeles, Cal.

MURDER MOTHER TONGUE.

University President Says Our College Graduates Are Illiterate.

That the American people are murdering their mother tongue and one of the great opportunities for reform at the present time is to teach them to reverence and prize the English language, and also to speak and write it decently, was the opinion expressed by President Faunce, of Brown University, at Chautauqua, N. Y. He did not spare the American colleges in his general arraignment and declared that they are turning out an alarming proportion of graduates who are actually illiterate.

"I should like," he said, "to see the colleges of the country join in an effort to induce the American people to write and speak the English tongue decently. The colleges are not doing it now. It is a fact that the colleges of this country are sending out illiterates. Many of our college seniors cannot write a decent business letter. Large numbers of them cannot express themselves in writing so as to be understood. We Americans should link our minds and hearts and hands in an effort to preserve this mother tongue which is our definite intellectual heritage. We should prize English speech and English literature and pass on this heritage of the past to the children of the future."

President Faunce said that he had been surprised and shocked recently when he mentioned the name of Prof. Huxley to a group of Brown students and no one knew whom he meant.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Alexander at Home.

Alexander was looking gloomily out of his palace windows, and sighing because there were no more worlds to conquer.

"Don't be an idiot moping around the house this way, Zandy," said Mrs. Alexander, pausing in her work of darning her husband's tunic. "If you are so dead set on new worlds to conquer, why don't you hire a schooner the way Columbus did and go out and discover a few?"—New York Globe.

Here is a rule that will not fail once in a hundred times: Be polite to a boy, and he'll be polite to you.

Fred—Why is she so popular? Arthur—A light hurts her eyes.—Truth.

Benham—In every sense of the word. Mrs. Benham—There isn't any sense in your words.—Judge.

Patience—And was the judge considerate? Patrice—Very; he asked my age before he swore me!

Passenger—Is this ticket good to stop off? Conductor—Yes'm. But it won't be good to git on again.

"Going up to hear that lecture on appendicitis to-day?" "Naw. I'm tired of these organ recitals."—Cornell Widow.

Frank—Were you actually surprised, as you said, when I proposed? May—Yes, indeed; I really had all but given you up!—Vogue.

"Did you ever gamble, ma?" "Only once, my son." "And when was that?" "When I married your father."—Princeton Gazette.

"You accuse this aviator of trespassing in your garden?" "Yes, judge; I caught him among my air currents."—New York Herald.

He (just rejected)—I shall never marry now. She—Foolish man! Why not? He—If you won't have me, who will?—Boston Transcript.

"Everybody ought to marry for love." "That's all right in theory." "Well?" "The trouble is that most of us can't afford it."—Pittsburg Post.

"I would like to help you, my poor man, but I haven't much work to give you." "That'll suit me down to the ground, ma'am; I don't want much.—Sourire.

He—You know, Clara, about the diamond engagement ring I want to give you, diamonds have gone up so—— She—Oh, you dear boy! How sweet of you to want to make sacrifices to prove your love!—Baltimore American.

"I admit I have the fault you mention," said the conceited man, self-complacently, "but it's the only fault I have, and it's a small one." "Yes," replied the candid friend, "just like the small hole that makes a plugged nickel no good."

She (pouting over hubby's charge of extravagance)—If I hadn't lost my head when you proposed, I'd never married you. He—Lost your head! And you say that in the face of this milliner's bill. Great Scott!—Boston Transcript.

"Captain, is there no way in which the ship may be saved?" "None at all, sir, we are going to the bottom; but I should not worry about the ship, sir, if I were you—she is fully insured. You'd better find a life belt.—Exchange.

"Mamma," inquired little Waldo of Boston, who was spending the winter in Florida, "what is that body of water?" "The Atlantic ocean, my dear." "The Atlantic ocean!" exclaimed little Waldo, in amazement, "why, I thought the Atlantic ocean was near Boston!"

It was a dark night. A man was riding a bicycle with no lamp. He came to a crossroads, and did not know which way to turn. He felt in his pocket for a match. He found but one. Climbing to the top of the pole, he lit the match carefully and in the ensuing glimmer read: "Wet Paint."

Charley Baskum was slyly holding, under the table, the hand of the winsome miss on his right, when his partner bridged. "Well," he ventured, "I am holding a heart hand, but I'm in doubt." "You know the rules of the game," suggested the miss. "Nothing wisked, nothing won."—Judge.

"You've been courting me now for a number of years, George," remarked a girl to a young man, "and I want to make a little leap-year proposal." "I—I am not in a position to m-marry just yet," stammered the youth; "but——" "Who said anything about marriage?" interrupted the girl, "I was going to propose that you stop coming here and give somebody else a chance."

The boss entered the office, his face clouded, his brow wrinkled in angry thought. He called the office boy. Regarding the youth sternly, he said: "Johnny, do you smoke cigarettes?" "I d-d-do a l-l-little, sir," stammered Johnny, paling beneath the tan of the baseball field. The boss fixed him with his eagle eye. "Then gimme one," he said. "I left mine on the bureau."—St. Paul Dispatch.

The hard looking customer had been arrested for stealing an umbrella. "What have you to say for yourself?" asked the police justice. "Are you guilty or not guilty?" "I'm one o' the guilty ones, y'r honor, I reckon," answered the prisoner. "The umbrella had the name of J. Thompson on the handle, G. H. Brickley stamped on the inside o' the cover, an' I stole it from a man named Quimby."

Little Willie was playing one day with the girl next door, when the latter exclaimed: "Don't you hear your mother calling you? That's three times she's done so! Aren't you going in?" "Not yet," responded Willie imperturbably. "Won't she whip you?" "Naw!" exclaimed Willie in disgust. "She ain't goin' to whip nobody! She's got company. So when I go in, she'll just say: 'The poor little man has been so deaf since he's had the measles!'"

Her Worst Fear.

Willie—Oh, mamma, that cook pa sent has red hair, scars all over her face, a breath that smells like whisky. She looks awful mad and says she wants to see you.

Mrs. Slimson—Oh, dear, I'm afraid she isn't going to stay!—Brooklyn Citizen.

Both Work.

Bacon—And doesn't her husband ever do any kitchen work?

Egbert—Sure, he does. He sometimes fires the rolling-pin back at his wife.—Yonkers Statesman.

"Something Different AND Something Better"

The Patented Two-Flue Construction, the facility to heat six griddles with direct draft damper open, the quick heating reservoir and the ease of heating water in it as quickly as with a teakettle, are some of the special features and qualities of that make them what the head line reads.

The Construction of LAUREL Ranges is extremely different from that used in all others. You say, "Why, this or that range looks just like a Laurel." True, but they are not constructed like it. Because of their construction "Laurel" Ranges are better ranges.

We would spell it b-e-s-t if we considered three or more degrees of range quality. Recognizing only two—Laurel and contemporary makes—we say "better." Better steel, better castings, better nickel plate, better designs, better workmanship, all contribute to the making of a better range—The Laurel.

Laurel Ranges will give "better" returns from a given quantity of fuel and at the same time do better baking.

As "Seeing is believing" an examination of LAUREL Ranges will convince you that "Laurel" features are not to be found in our advertising only.

Better Not Get Dyspepsia

If you can help it. Kodol prevents Dyspepsia, by effectually helping Nature to Relieve Indigestion. But don't trifle with Indigestion.

A great many people who have trified with indigestion, have been sorry for it—when nervous or chronic dyspepsia resulted, and they have not been able to cure it.

Use Kodol and prevent having Dyspepsia.

Everyone is subject to indigestion. Stomach derangement follows stomach abuse, just as naturally and just as surely as a sound and healthy stomach results upon the taking of Kodol.

When you experience sourness of stomach, belching of gas and nauseating fluid, bloated sensation, gnawing pain in the pit of the stomach, heart burn (so-called), diarrhoea, headaches, dullness or chronic tired feeling—you need Kodol. And then the quicker you take Kodol—the better. Eat what you want, let Kodol digest it.

Ordinary pepsin "dyspepsia tablets," physics, etc., are not likely to be of much benefit to you, in digestive ailments. Pepsin is only a partial digester—and physics are not digesters at all.

Kodol is a perfect digester. If you could see Kodol digesting every particle of food, of all kinds, in the glass test-tubes in our laboratories, you would know this just as well as we do.

Nature and Kodol will always cure a sick stomach—but in order to be cured, the stomach must rest. That is what Kodol does—rests the stomach, while the stomach gets well. Just as simple as A, B, C.

Obituary

Chas. Allen, son of Thomas A. and Kate Pearson, was born Oct. 17, 1898, at Terre Haute, Ind., departed this life at Butler, Ind., Sept. 16, 1909, age 10 years, 10 months and 29 days.

For five long weeks Charley has been a great sufferer and at times seemed at the very entrance of the kingdom. Charley was baptized by the Rev. Braden and united with the Christian church, January, 1909. He was also a member of the Christian Sabbath school.

Charley was a very bright, sweet child, always willing to go at his parents bidding. His life work is ended. He is about his Master's business. He will watch and wait at heaven's gate for those whom are left. May we all by Charley's death be made better. May we walk anew in the path our Master desires us to.

Charley leaves to mourn his departure a father, mother, two sisters and five brothers besides many relatives.

The Rev. Braden gave a short talk at the home, then the remains were taken to Terre Haute to the home of Mrs. Margaret Pearson, the grandmother of the deceased.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. Dutcher, pastor of the Christian church at Terre Haute. The remains were laid to rest in the Mt. Pleasant cemetery.

Charley's gone to join the angels,
He obeyed his Master's call;
With his sister he is happy,
And he wants to meet us all.

Dearest parents look to Jesus,
Cast your sorrow at his feet.
He will heal the broken hearted
For his promise is complete.

Comfort these dear weeping parents,
For with Charley they must part,
Christ will hover round you always,
For he says give me thy heart.

Country vs. City

It is a well known fact that city bred folks are prone to believe that they are far superior in knowledge and wisdom to the people of the rural districts. And it is generally accepted that the brain work is being done by the former class, the claim being made that their advantages for securing knowledge is far superior to their rural friends.

We have often wondered if this isn't a misconception, or perhaps an out-of-date idea which has been handed down from the times of Benjamin Franklin when there were but few schools and the printing business was in its infancy. The average city man is merely a piece of machinery, toiling from morning till night at one thing until it becomes second nature to him, thus his reasoning propensities become dwarfed because of laying dorment. The person who fills the position in the rural districts has something new before him all the time. The clerk in the country store must know how to keep books, make up the cash at the close of the day, write the ads for the local paper; he must know how to order goods, and often times is sent to the city to buy goods, and hence must know something about the quality and understand the styles and then use, his best judgment as to what would most likely sell in his territory.

The farmer has all opportunity to read and plenty of time to digest what he reads. He is not troubled with what the city folks are pleased to call "society." He has time to learn about his government and keeps posted on what the government is doing for him, and perhaps that accounts for the general high prices in all farm products. The farmer is the most intelligent voter today; he studies the issues carefully and knows what will benefit him and what will not. The average city employe votes the way his employer tells him, and thus he is saved from the trouble of studying up the matter for himself.

So the boy who leaves the country for the advantages of the city should remember that there are disadvantages also, and that if he does not want to become a piece of machinery his place is in the rural districts where people think for themselves.

Pressing Down Pains

are a sign of serious female complaint, that should have immediate attention.

If you begin in time, you can generally treat yourself at home, without the need of consulting a physician, by the regular use of Cardui, the well-known remedy for women's ills.

Composed of purely vegetable and perfectly harmless medicinal ingredients, being, besides, a gentle, non-intoxicating, strengthening tonic,

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMAN'S RELIEF

relieves all female complaints.

"My wife," writes John A. Rodgers, of Hampden Sidney, Va., "was nothing but a walking skeleton, from female trouble. She suffered agonies with bearing-down pains, backache and headache. Doctors failed to relieve her, so she took Cardui, and is now entirely cured."

The contract has been let at Kendallville for a $35,000 business block to be erected at once on Main street by J. Keller. The building will have a frontage of 80 feet and will be three stories high.

It never pays to depreciate a competitor. That is putting it on a low plane of ethics, but it goes to the point No man helps himself by slurring another, in business at least. It is not good business. It tends to raise in the mind of a customer a question about the man who does it. If a bid for any article of trade is in negotiation, tell what you can do and stand on your own statements. If you are not sure of yourself and the ability of your house to handle the business thoughly, don't bid. If the customer mentions or inquires about your competitor, don't speak ill of him, but tell what your house can do and stick to your own proposition. Be frank and honest and sure you know what you are talking about. Don't brag, don't bluff and don't ever "knock." The hammer is a weapon dangerous to the man who uses it. It is quite as likely to smash his own fingers as to drive his purpose home. The good of any trade is not to be served. Neither is the good of your own house. If you can stand on your own feet you are all right. But it is all wrong to kick the feet out from under some other fellow, and you are always in danger of taking a fall out of yourself if you try it. It is human nature to be jealous of or knock a strong competitor, but remember the man you are talking to never finds your strong competitor doing any knocking. —Garrett Clipper.

A civil action was filed in the court of 'Squire Green Friday against Jas. Kness, formerly of this county, now a resident of Oklahom, a in which the payment of $55 for labor is demanded by the plaintiff, Oliver Hall, of Butler township. It is alleged that Hall worked on the defendant's farm and failed to receive remuneration for same. Mr. Kness has been in Oklahoma for some time and recently returned to visit his son at Avilla. Hall learned of his presence in this vicinity and at once engaged the service of Attorney H. E. Hartman, preparatory to the institution of the proceedings and actions were filed at LaOtto and Auburn and the officers have made an effort to serve papers on the defendant. They have been unable to accomplish this as yet for the reason that Kness has remained in one county but a short time as he has been going from DeKalb to Allen, etc. Late this afternoon Attorney Hartman was making a continued effort to cause the defendant to be found and in all probability the trial will occur in the very near future. The plaintiff is determined to secure compensation for his labor.

The following letter which is self-explanatory has been sent us for publication:

Auburn, Ind., Oct. 4, 1909.

HERALD EDITOR, Butler, Ind.

Dear Sir—It has been decided by the Anti-Saloon League of DeKalb county to circulate petitions in October to be presented to the county commissioners, Nov. 1, praying for a local option election to be held the latter part of November. This will bring the date a month after the city elections and will thus avoid any political complications. This is a question of saloon or no saloon, and it is up to the voters of the county to decide it as a business proposition.

Yours truly,

CHAS. S. STEWARD, M. D.,
Secretary County Committee.

Hon. Charles Eckhart and wife returned Saturday morning from an extended visit in the east. While gone they attended a reunion of Mr. Eckhart's old regiment in Pennsylvania and also spent some time in New York City witnessing the Hudson-Fulton celebration. Mr. and Mrs. Eckhart were out in a launch when the Roosevelt steamed in the harbor bearing Commander Robert E. Peary. About one of the prettiest sights as described by Mr. Eckhart was the arrival of four torpedo boad destroyers. Most all of the other large vessels were anchored along the docks.—Courier.

The wet and dry option election in DeKalb county will be held between November 20 and 30. The temperance leaders want to keep the subject out of local politics, but propose to start in vigorously after the municipal electsons November 2 and make the campaign short, but memorable. "The question is not one of politics," remarksd the Rev. D. V. Williams of this city, the presidsnt of the county anti-saloon organization, to the Clipper. "There is no reason why it should be mixed up with the municipal elections. We are laying plans constantly for our work, but we will wait until the regular elections are done away with before we begin our public campaign. We propose to have the election between November 20 and 30. We want to get the subject settled, and believe the liquor people are just as anxious. We do not believe anythin g could be gained by a postponement of the election and a long drawn out fight. The county commissioners have an option in making the date within not less than twenty days and not more than thirty days after the petition is filed In case the commissioners are friendly to us they will doubtless take our suggestion of a time.—Garrett Clipper.

After Nov. 1 it will cost ten cents instead of eight cents as at preasant to register a piece of mail. The order increases the maximum indemnity paid to the owner of a lost or rifled registered letter from $25 to $50, thus doubling the department's liability for valuable articles intrusted to its registry branch. This additional insurance of $25 for two cents is granted at a much lower rate than is offered for a similar amount by any private concern. The changes ordered constitute the first move toward making the postal service self-sustaining. The retgistry system is reported to be conducted at a loss, and in order to make it pay its way radical measures are necessary. New features being considered by the postmaster general include the establishment of a parcel registration system with a five-cent fee and a small indemnity, and a preferred class of registered matter of high value with increases in the fee and indemnity up to twenty cents and $160, the limits fixed by law. It is pointed out that the parcel measure will meet a public demand for a cheap and safe means of transmitting Christmas packages and others of like character, anb that the graduating of the fee in accordance with the risk involved and the amount of care necessary to insure safe transmission is in accordance with sound business principles.

Dress Goods and Silk Department

This department of our business has always received unusal attention. This is necessitated by the frequent showings of styles demonstrated in the weave and pattern of goods in demand. We realize that unsatisfactory service in the fabric. After being made causes ill feeling on the part of the customer, and our selections have been made with a view to avoiding this as much as possible. We have never let the cost of the better service fabric deter us from placing it in our stock. You will find here this season those materials and shades which are most in demand, and quality considered. You may demand upon prices and value.

Hosiery and Knit Underwear Department.

Merchandise that fits, wears and is reasonable in price is the great difficulty in this class of goods.

HARDWOOD ASHES.

Ashes from hard wood, charcoal and a bit of salt are almost a specific for intestinal worms. Have it where the hogs can eat it whenever they want it, and don't be afraid that they will eat too much if they have it regularly.—Farm Journal.

SMALL CHICK FOOD.

For small chicks at first it is well to feed stale bread crumbs and hard-boiled eggs crumbled fine. Afterwards oatmeal and cornmeal cake, or "johnny-cake," as it is generally called, make good rations for the growing chicks, with wheat or cracked corn added as soon as they can eat these grains. Many people prefer oats to wheat, as a better muscle and bone-forming food, but chickens will eat the wheat at an earlier age.—Farmer's Home Journal.

BLACKHEAD REMEDY.

In an article on blackhead in turkeys and white diarrhoea in chickens, an exchange concludes that there is no effective remedy for these diseases after birds are once infected and recommends prompt use of preventative methods. Among the preventatives most highly commended is the liberal use of epson salts, administered either in a mash or in drinking water. A dose is a teaspoonful to ten old fowls or twenty young ones, administered about once a week.—Farmers' Home Journal.

A FIRST FOOD.

It is sometimes perplexing to figure out just what we should feed the hens early in the morning. It is a disputed question whether we should give grain or mash and just how much. From years of experience we should advise the grain, just a small portion early to scratch; then follow with a light food of cooked vegetables and scraps, with more grain during the day and afternoon. If hens get a full feed early in the day, they soon become lazy and will not hustle, therefore we should try to keep them busy. The first feed should be grain scattered in the scratching shed, and an effort should be made to keep the hens hungry. Late in the evening they should be given all they can eat and at night their crops should be full. Give a variety of every kind of food and vegetables, and give it so that the entire day is consumed in getting it.—Farmers' Union Guide.

IF YOU BUY HENS.

The question which worries one most when starting with poultry, is which kinds of hens to buy. The breed is often not so much to consider as the kind of hens. We do not know how to select the good hens, those that will lay, and for this reason we buy hens and feed them throughout the winter and get no eggs.

It is very important that we know the kind of hens to select—the kind which will be healthy and lay during the winter months. Of course, there is no way to tell how this may be done, but the trained eye can see at a glance just which hens we should select.

The practical farmer can tell instantly which ear of corn will make the best seed, or which horse or cow will make the best to breed from, and the poultryman can tell you at a glance which lot of hens you should buy for eggs. If you select the right kind of hens and give them the right kind of treatment there should be no reason why you should not have eggs at all seasons of the year.—Farmers' Union Guide.

POULTRY-MANURE.

Poultry-manure should never be stored in or near the poultry house unless it is mixed with land plaster or dry, pulverized muck. When put into boxes or barrels it makes a good breeding place for mites and lice, says a correspondent in Farm and Fireside.

When mixed with plaster or muck its value as a fertilizer is increased and mites and lice will not live in it. It is good for forcing most all vegetables. It is not so good for peas and beans, but is excellent for vines, corn and potatoes. It will nearly double the yield of pumpkins and squashes if a handful is worked into the soil around each vine. A handful put on each hill will grow more corn and ripen it two weeks earlier than any corn phosphate. When used for top-dressing it should be well covered with soil.

WATER AND GUINEA FOWLS.

Geese and ducks are becoming more salable each season. The price of geese was almost treble that of chickens in the market during November and December of last year. Ducks did not bring a price equal to that received for geese, but even they sold remarkably well. Geese hatch their own eggs and brood the goslings. They seem to care for them better than do mother hens or brooders. When once the goslings are a week or ten days old, they grow very fast and require little attention.

Old, marshy lands, or those that have a fairly good crop of grass, afford good ranging land for geese. Geese do best if they have a dry spot on elevated land to go to when it rains. After the goslings are three weeks old they graze their entire living from the grass during the summer.

Ducks must be continually fed or they will not prosper. Young ducks must be fed several times a day on mixed meal or cracked corn, or they do not grow as they should. The best means of feeding cracked corn to young ducks is to put the corn into a shallow pan of water and let the ducks take it from the water as they eat it. Ducks require water to drink with their food.

Guinea fowls are more profitable to raise than ducks or geese. If well-grown, they can be marketed at broiler size at double the price usually paid per pound for other poultry. If poorly fed, the guinea keet is tough as sole leather, but where they are fed fairly well and have a good range to go over where food is plentiful, they grow quickly into broiler size and are eagerly sought after by the market poultrymen. Several venture at growing guinea owls on farms have proved fairly successful. The best results come from small flocks kept on a small farm where there is a free range over green fields and meadows that are well supplied with insects of all kinds. Guinea fowls seem to prosper best where there is a dry gravel soil. Wet lands are not suited to their habits. They nest in out-of-the-way places, hide their nests, hatch their brood, and raise them in the grass. If the lands are well drained and there is a safe roosting place out of the wet and damp, they do better than young turkeys, but they succumb to wet conditions even sooner than do the turkey poults.

The eggs of guinea fowls are successfully hatched by hens, and the keets are grown in this way quite as successfully as with the guinea hens. They are more domestic when grown with the hens and do not wander about so much. Guineas do not get along well with our poultry. They are quarrelsome. The old guineas are apt to kill young chicks if they come about where their brood of young is eating. Guineas prefer to mate in pairs, but they will mate in trios or three and four, wherever there are a lot of guinea fowl. All surplus males should be disposed of. Males that lack a mate are apt to destroy the young when hatched.—Country Gentleman.

NOTES.

Plant a patch of green stuff for your poultry and allow them the run of it.

Have a movable floor in your chicken house, so that the droppings may be saved.

Unless you wish your hens to form the egg-eating habit crush all the egg shells they eat.

It is a good things to so construct your poultry houses that they may be moved with ease.

Dry picked fowls present a much plumper appearance than those scalded and then picked.

Even on a small scale well bred poultry can be made to return a handsome profit, if handled right.

Better raise fifty youngsters and raise them well than to have double the number and stunt them all.

Sunshine is one of the most healthful agents and should be permitted to enter the poultry house as much as possible.

Clean up and disinfect your poultry house at least once a week and the fowls will be less troubled with disease and vermin.

FAMILY OF INVENTORS.

Monument to Be Erected in Memory of the Three Howes.

Within a few days work will be begun upon the foundations for the monument which is to be erected to the three Howes, inventors, all of the same family, who were born in Spencer in the same house in the south part of town.

The monument, which is being modeled by Paul Winters Morris of New York, will occupy a position in the grass plot in front of the town hall. It bears upon its face bronze portrait medallions in alto relief of the three inventors, Elias Howe, inventor of the sewing machine; William Howe, inventor of the truss bridge, and Tyler Howe, inventor of the spring bed.

Underneath is a bronze relief showing the house in which they were born, and which is standing today in a somewhat dilapidated condition in the section of Spencer known as Howes Mills.

The die upon which the bronze panel will be placed is 6 feet 3 inches by 7 feet 6 inches. The monument, will be 10 feet 6 inches high, of Barre granite, and is expected to be a work of art, as several sculptors of note submitted designs in competition. Each of the medallions is 20 inches in diameter.

The funds for this monument, aggregating something like $3,000, have been raised by subscription, largely from members and descendants of the families of the inventors.

The Howe Memorial Association, which is managing the matter, was incorporated a couple of years ago, following a meeting held in October, 1906, and the original intention was to repair the old home as a memorial, but that was found impracticable, owing to its state of decay. It is expected that the dedication will take place during September, and will be made quite an affair.

It is hoped to have sufficient funds remaining with which to erect a marker at the location of the birthplace and to maintain the monument.

The history of the three men presents a number of very interesting anecdotes. Elias having been presented in the royal court at England while promoting his invention in Great Britain, and being invested with the medal of honor. During the civil war also he played a patriotic part, furnishing from his own resources.—Boston Globe.

Swans on the Thames.

Over 200 cygnets have been reared on the Thames between Southwark Bridge and Marsh Lock, Henley, during the last season. The largest brood was one of nine cygnets at Halliford. The black swans at Goring, which are owned by the Vintners Company, have also multiplied.

Altogether there are about 500 swans on the Thames between the places indicated, the King being the owner of the greatest number and the remainder being the property of the Dyers and Vintners companies.—London Evening Standard.

NEEDLESS TOLL OF DEATH IN THE UNITED STATES

OF all things in the United States, that most enlightened nation, human life is cheapest. In his annual report for 1906 Dr. C. J. Whalen, Commissioner of Health for Chicago, made this statement as a fact too familiar to be controverted:

"There are in the United States to-day approximately eighty millions of people, of whom a million or more will die each year. Of the total number of deaths 25 per cent are unnecessary and could be prevented."

In a recent lecture before the New York Academy of Medicine Dr. C. A. L. Reed of Cincinnati expressed the same idea in another form when he declared that preventable diseases in the United States kill one person every two minutes of the year. At this rate the total would foot up 262,800 lives deliberately thrown away every twelve months. Let him who thinks this startling fact of no concern to himself remember that death is singularly indiscriminating.

In Europe, where human beings are regarded as too valuable to be wasted, some remarkable reductions have been made in the death rate. England and Wales had, in 1903, a death rate of 15.4 per thousand, which was a decrease of 32.2 per cent. from that of the preceding decade. The Netherlands, with a rate of 15.6, showed a decrease of 11 per cent; Denmark, 15.8, a decrease of 9.7 per cent; Holland, 17.3, a decrease of 6.5 per cent. Even Sweden, where self-preservation had already become a religion, had been able to secure a decrease of 5.6 per cent, bringing her down to the remarkably low figure of 15.1 per thousand.

But the most astounding thing is that, while the death rate in Europe continues to decline, it has turned about and is on the increase in the United States. In twenty-five out of thirty-six larger cities the death rate was higher in 1906 than in 1905, and in nine of them it was higher than it had been in five years. For the five years from 1901 to 1906 the average death rate from typhoid in Norway was 5.7 per 100,000; in Switzerland, 6.5; in Germany, 7.6; in Japan, 11.4; in the United Kingdom, 12.1; for the registration area of the United States, 32.2, or six times the rate in Norway, four and a half times the rate in Germany, and nearly three times the rate in England.

By the typhoid fever test human life is held cheaper in Pittsburg than anywhere else, for the death rate from that preventable disease averaged 129.6 per 100,000 population for the five years ending with 1906, the highest in the civilized world. Pueblo, Colo., stood second in this catalogue of shame, with a rate of 113.6; Allegheny, third, 110.1; Jacksonville, Fla., 76.3; Columbus, O., 72.3; Louisville, Ky., 67.6. And typhoid is but one of the preventable diseases. Disease works by stealth in the darkened chamber, out of sight of all but a few. But Violence seeks crowds where in the full glare of noonday he strikes down his victims with all the bloody ferocity of an Indian massacre.

According to the mortality statistics of the United States Census Bureau for 1906 deaths from all forms of violence in the registration area in 1906 aggregated 49,552. This is at the rate of 120.9 per 100,000, as compared with a rate of 30.1 in the German Empire in the same year. Nor is this all. The rate exceeds that of 1905, which was 111.9, and greatly exceeds that of any preceding year. The rate rose steadily from 6.1 per cent of all deaths in 1902 to 7.5 per cent in 1906. Violence now ranks fifth among the principal causes of death, and the rate is still increasing.

The railroads led the slaughter in 1906, as they do to-day, with a tally of 7,090 killed, as compared with 4,485 in 1902, an increase from 14.1 per 100,000 to 17.3. Other principal causes of death by violence, with total number of deaths and the rate per 100,000 inhabitants, are set forth in the following table, murders, suicides and executions being omitted:

Cause.	Rate.	No. of Deaths.
Railroads	17.3	7,090
Drowning	10.7	4,395
Burns and scalds	8.7	3,585

One of the curious things about the fearful story of death by violence is that human life is cheapest in the smaller cities. Measured by the deaths by violence, human life is cheapest in Butler, Pa., where the annual rate is 379.4 per 100,000 population. Pittston, in the same State, stands second, with a rate of 359.6. Iron Mountain, Mich., is third in rank, with a rate of 290.7; then come McKeesport, Pa., 290.1; Shenandoah, Pa., 278.9; Pottsville, Pa., 276. Pueblo, Colo., is seventh in the list, with a rate of 269.3. Altogether there are more than a score of small cities, half of them in Pennsylvania, the rest in New Jersey, Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Maryland, in which the death rate by violence exceeds the highest rate in any large city.

The total number of deaths by violence in 1906 and the rate per 100,000 inhabitants from that cause in seventeen of the larger cities are set forth in the following table:

City.	Rate.	Total Deaths.
Pittsburg	190.9	716
New Orleans	135.3	425
Kansas City	126.7	231
Buffalo	123.6	472

In Chicago violence caused 7.6 per cent of all deaths. This was an increase over the preceding decade. The railroad stands first, with a total of 309 deaths for the city. Next comes falls, which caused 283 deaths. Third in rank of causes are the street cars, with 167 deaths to their credit. Vehicles and horses, another peril of the street, the seventh in order of importance, caused 95 deaths.
